

“A great work of art is cherished, not merely endured....because it guides and inspires.”

S. Kriyananda
Meaning in the Arts

Preface

Art, whether in the form of literature, music, painting, or sculpting, is ultimately about making meaning—and great art is about the deepest kind of meaning, which brings wholeness to our lives. It is not surprising, therefore, that within our Education for Life system, literature and art come under the curriculum heading of Wholeness.

Each unique and original entry in this literary magazine reveals the children in the very real process of making meaning both on the page and in their lives. They work hard at shaping their material toward an end. They imagine and reflect, observe, listen, ask questions, draw connections, make assertions, and revise to catch just the right shape, or sound, or nuance. They learn that surprises may be friends, not enemies, that roadblocks are temporary, and that energy, will power, and discipline are the foundation of creativity—all the “stuff” of the deepest kind of learning.

While this publication celebrates the children’s originality and creativity, it also celebrates their teachers who have crafted an environment that allows and encourages young writers and artists to trust their own ideas and to share them with others, to take control, to experiment, to struggle, to fail, and, ultimately, to succeed. Their creative products are the result of a wonderful synchronicity between child and teacher, and they are enchanting.

Pirate Adventure

By Dean Bojinov, age 5

Pirates are sailing to a treasure island. There is treasure below the orange sand. When they were digging, they heard a clank. They knew it was a treasure chest. They were trying to take the treasure chest. They did it with a green metal shovel. They opened the treasure chest, and there was a golden cup, jewels and gems.

The Flowery Day

By Jaya Urrutia, age 4

There was a flower that was growing, (this is the tiny seed). There was a rainbow that comes from the clouds after the sun came out. A flower grew inside the rainbow. It started raining. The rain was getting harder and harder and harder and harder until it was almost time to stop, but it still had three little drops. Then it had eight drops. Then it had four drops, three drops, two drops and finally it had one drop left. The rain had stopped!

Bob

By Neel Rangan, age 4

The river is flowing. Bob is working in his house. The clouds are coming from the sky. It is raining. A monkey is hanging from the tree. He is trying to escape from a scary animal that eats meat. There is something enormous swimming in the river. It is a shark. The river is leading to the road and Bob's house. The shark is swimming, but Bob is far away. Bob is in his house. He is saving himself from the shark.

The Caterpillar Who Turned into a Butterfly

By Pooja Punn, age 5

Once upon a time there lived a caterpillar. His name was Squeaky. One day he saw a beautiful butterfly. "I want to be like you," said the caterpillar. He was hungry so off he went. He ate and ate until he turned into a chrysalis. Then he turned into a butterfly just like the beautiful butterfly. Then they both became friends. They played games and they flew outside together.

The Missing Light

By Alec Holmes, age 6

Somebody opened the door. It is a skeleton. He is camouflaging because he doesn't want anyone to see him. He is trying to get away with the missing light. The missing light is a power that was hidden inside a ball. As he is running away, the skeleton falls into the missing lake, which is formed in the shape of a number one. The power floated back to its home. The skeleton sinks and a shark swims up and eats him.

How Everyone Became Aliens

By Kevin Jiang, age 6

Seven different colored aliens were here on Earth to attack the humans. The leader made a house turn into fire. One of them was hiding pretending to be a person. This alien really looked like a person. The red one made people become black aliens. The yellow one shot banana boomerangs that made people into another type of alien. No one knew that this was happening. They all combined to scare people away.

How the Sun Disappeared

By Eegan Ram, age 6

Once upon a time it was a sunny day in Florida. One day the sun went away. Only one centimeter of the sun showed. Then one day it was like midnight during the day. After the sun stopped coming, it rained and rained. If you stepped in a puddle it would cover your whole foot. In the Fall the sun revealed itself. When it revealed itself, it was Christmas.

The Mystery of the Christmas Trees

By Bryan Fu, age 6

This is a Christmas tree mystery. In a store a Christmas tree was completely on fire. In a different house there were lots of presents, and one of the kids was running to get the presents. Santa had just come. In another store the Christmas tree had a lot of smoke, and the Christmas tree's face was all crinkled up. The tree was a little bit on fire. Santa just dropped two presents here because the smoke frightened him. In the next store Santa dropped a few more presents and other presents were still dropping. Next-door the Christmas tree was really on fire. One of the kids said, "Run." The other kid was frightened and sad because Christmas was getting burned up. Next-door Santa dropped more little presents and everyone came down and opened them all. Next-door the Christmas tree was broken. Why were the Christmas trees going on fire?

Dragons

By Luca Gabrea Tejada, age 7

This is a pack of Dragons fighting skulls. These are all their energy powers. Some shoot strings that wrap around and explode. Others have grass power, lava power, water power, and spark power. The black dragon has spark power, which distracts the skulls by shooting sparks and creating smoke. The black dragon, which is black like the night, is the longest and strongest dragon of all. The black dragon's name is Smoke. These are his energy powers. He has smoke power, fireball power, and can fly faster than any other dragon. Danger on sight!

The Rainbow and the Rainbow Flower

By Pia Alvarez, age 5

Once there was a rainbow. This rainbow didn't have any colors except one—red. The flower didn't have any colors either, except at its center. The next day the rainbow had two colors. It was red and orange. The flower grew a little more. The next day the rainbow had more colors. The new color was yellow. The rainbow and the flower's colors grew. Now it is the next day, and now the rainbow and the flower have the color green like the grass. Now the rainbow has blue like the sky. Now they both have the color blue, but one more color is missing. It is purple.

Imaginative Stories

The Loving Sock Puppet

By Joseph Dieckmann, age 7

There once was a sock puppet named Walter. He was happy. Then, one day he wanted to write a love poem. So that's what he did. He said, "My poem shall be called The Gateway to Expressing Love, and my poem shall go like this:

Love is a bell
Ringing in your heart
Love is a sweet breeze
In the fresh morning air
I wonder how to express this feeling
And all I may think shall be love."

Walter shared it with his friends, and Walter's friends loved it as much as he did.

The Magic Flower

By Lylah Urrutia, age 6

There was a magical flower and there was a girl fairy that liked the flower. She made a wish. Her wish was to be a princess fairy. The next day she became a princess fairy. She flapped her colorful wings and traveled to an island called Galapagos. She made a house out of sticks. She made friends with an eagle. The magic flower had turned into the eagle. They had fun together. The eagle was really big. The princess got on top of the eagle and they flew through the air.

The next day the bad guy came alive. I noticed he had more weapons. The good guy had more weapons too. The battle was twelve hours long. The good guy just won. They had a big party. The good guy got a trophy.

The Snail Who Goes to the End of the World

By Vincent Barragan, age 7

A snail is trying to get to the end of the world. That is where he can get a present for his friend's birthday. When he gets near the dynamite, he decides to go around it. Then the snail finds the gift for his friends. It is a motorboat. He thinks his friend, the ghost, will like it. He gives the ghost the motorboat. The snail does not want to go home to the other side of the world because the zombies are attacking it. He does go back to help his snail friends so they can get to the end of the world. He asks the ghost if he could borrow the motorboat. The ghost says, "Sure." Then he motors away. He gets all his snail friends, and he motors back to the end of the world. Then he introduces them to his friend the ghost.

Flight 161 – The Crazy Sushi Guy and Me

By Ryan Jiang, age 9

It was midnight. The plane just took off. Suddenly a slimy tentacle came out from under my seat. It wrapped around my leg. A flight attendant came and seized the tentacle. "Sorry for the uncomfortableness," she said. After six hours we landed in Japan. I said, "Ni how." A random man said, "Ni shu shae." He turned out to work at the sushi bar. I had a cup of green tea. The world was very busy at the airport. I took a taxi to a hotel called Rawfish. The sushi guy took me to the room. Something fishy was going on here. He was the taxi driver and the shinkansen conductor. Something very fishy was going on here. I took another shinkansen. The sushi guy sat next to me. I couldn't bear it anymore. "Who are you and what do you want?" "I am a sushi spy. I track down people who like sushi. Together we can eat the great sushi demon." "OK." So we had lunch together in Tokyo and took a train to Edo. Then we met the sushi demon. He was really a huge floating pile of sushi. We ate and ate until we devoured the pile.

Then I bought a GRV Transformer. It changes from an iPhone to an iPad and back again. Too bad it was only made of paper. I took the "yma no te se m" to the next station. The sushi guy took me into a taxi and we each rented a room at the Ta ko. Suddenly a slimy Ramen wrapped around my leg...

Book Two: Ramen Roundup

I bit the Ramen but it bit me first. Suddenly the sushi guy arrived with a bowl of diluted soy sauce and chopsticks. He took the Ramen, dunked it in the soy sauce, and ate it in one whole bite!

Preview of upcoming book, 'The Villains of Sushiland.' Riceball – the fattest villain. He has a piece of sashimi for his internal organs. His samurai armor is made of Nori (dried seaweed).

Glossary:

Shinkansen – A Japanese bullet train.

Edo – a particular city. Tokyo – the capital of Japan.

Ramen – thin Japanese noodle.

Ta ko – octopus.

Yma no te se m – a silver train with a green line.

Ni shu shae – Who are you (in Chinese)

Little League Baseball Series

By Dominic Christiansen, age 8
(n.b. Dominic is on the Cubs)

Giants vs. Cubs

The Giants scored in the first. They scored three.
First we got five runs on two doubles and six singles.
The second inning was a shut out.

Cubs 5 Giants 3.

Then there was one run on two singles and one double.

Cubs 6 Giants 3.

Giants score three to tie it.

I score the winning run and crush the catcher.

Three runs.

Giants 9 Cubs 7.

Cubs score three.

Giants 9 Cubs 10.

Giants score five.

Giants 14 Cubs 10.

We score five and win.

Cubs score five and win.

Giants 14 Cubs 15.

We win! Yay!

Cubs vs. Athletics

First they score four. Not a good start.

We have a good inning and score three.

Second inning they score three on ten hits.

A second three run hit gets us the lead.

Cubs 9 A's 7.

Third inning two runs on a single.

We get one that at least gives us the 10 to 9 lead.

Fourth inning they get only three.

We are losing.

Cubs 10 A's 12.

They score on a towering fly.

We score four on three doubles and one single.

Christiansen is running home at his fastest! He touches home and smashes into the gate.

We win the game.

Cubs vs. Red Sox

For some reason, they wipe out.

We get five.

Cubs 5 Red Sox 0.

First of the runs we go to 2nd.

Cubs 5 Red Sox 0.

Four in the second.

"Here we come!"

9 to 0.

They score 0.

It was a fun inning.

"Ground ball up the middle. Dominic Christiansen, with a side arm throw gets him!"

We get two. It was cool.

They get five with one high fly.

We get four and a good inning.

They get five to end it.

Molly and Tilly Races – The Stories of Two Rats

By Elijah LaCour DeLyle, age 8

Book One: Once upon a time there were two rats. Their names were Molly and Tilly. They lived in my house, not in a wall but in a cage. But one day they got in a good, long fight. After a while, they decided to have a race. The next day they started their race. 3...2...1...GO! Molly went right to sleep. Why? I don't know but Tilly started running down the stairs. Molly now woke up and jumped on the railing and won.

Book Two: This time Tilly wanted to win so she looked up this new place called Academy. This is what she ordered: she ordered an iPhone 4S and she found out that in every staircase there was a secret passageway. The password was 'Open Timothy.' Molly knew where it went. So the next day they decided to race again. They went to the staircase and said, "3..2..1.. Go!" Molly tried to go to sleep but because of Tilly's yelling of 'Open Timothy', Molly had a hard time. But then when Molly got to sleep, a secret passageway opened. Tilly ran into it and, as I said, Molly knew where it went. So Tilly went in there, but the first thing she knew was that she was in a river of quickballs. She almost sank in it. After a long journey through the passageway, Tilly got out. She was exhausted and tired, but she was thinking that she was going to win the race, but when she came out, she was where she had begun. Molly jumped on the railing and won the race. Tilly was so mad that she exploded and got shot up to the moon. When she got there, she yelled so loud that Molly had to cover her ears. Then Tilly got blasted back to Earth and bawled for sixteen days straight.

Book Three: This time Tilly ordered something else from Academy. She got a slingshot. The next morning Molly and Tilly had a race. 3...2...1...Go! Tilly got in her slingshot and went back, back, back, back, back x 12. Right before she let go, the rubber snapped and smacked her in the face and instead of going forward she went backwards and through the wall into the bathroom, through the metal into the next room, smack through the wall, slammed into the ground and, because of the momentum, she went through the tree house stump, through the fence, scraped on the road, went through a bigger fence, bounced on a train track, through the fence again and stopped by the road yelling, "OUCH"!!!!!!

When a Man Bought a Bell Tower

By Finn von Bunau, age 8

He was a nice man. His favorite color was red. His hair color was brown. He liked his money. In time, he wanted a new house. He found a bell tower and he liked it. He thought it would make a good home. It cost five hundred thousand dollars. But he only had five cents. What could he do if he only had five cents? Well, we will turn the page and see what happens.

So, he went to the bank. The banker gave him a million dollars. (Unfortunately, we cannot go to this bank anymore because it got bombed in World War II.) Then he bought the bell tower for five hundred thousand dollars. "It was overpriced, but it was worth it," he said. Then the man went in and said, "I like this bell tower house."

How I Learned Guitar

By Gaurav Chakravarty, age 8
(made in China)

Once upon a time, about two years ago, I started learning guitar. The first chord I learned was C major. It was pretty hard, but I mastered it. Then I learned a few more songs. They were called Imagine and Hotel California. They were very fun to learn. Oh, yeah, I forgot to tell you that I started with an acoustic guitar. Anyways, I thought about quitting for a year or two; then around eight, I started again. Then I got an electric guitar. It was fantastic! At school almost every day we had a jamming session. It was great! After all that time I started to go to concerts. And here I am now – 8, almost 9 – and I still play guitar.

Disappearing Dog - Book One (an excerpt)

By Pailyn Tayjasanant, age 9

Chapter One – The Beginning

Hi, my name is Elisa. I make lots of inventions. One of my first was a spinner. I got some curlers and some ribbon. The reason I did this was because I wanted to spin my dog, Henry. Right now, I'm bored. "Ruff ruff." "Be quiet Gazpacho!" Gazpacho is Henry's nickname. Now that I think about it, I've called him lots of things before, like Broccoli, Cauliflower, Wonton, Carrot and so on. Any vegetable name that comes to my head, I call Henry that. I never call him Henry.

Chapter Two – My Great Idea

I'm looking on my computer for good ideas for inventions to make. "Ugh!" I said. "My computer doesn't work." I thought for a little moment. "Ah ha!" Bok Choy looked confused when I said that. I should make a computer that never runs out of battery. "New and improved," I announced. So I made a diagram. Then I came across a blank. "It has to charge something... But wait, it could be so big that if you use it for one year straight, that's when you have to charge it!" I announced to Lima Bean.

Chapter Three – The Problem

I was just finishing up my diagram when suddenly the lights went out, then turned back on. Cabbage had disappeared. "Oh no!" I screamed. I started pacing. My mind was practically racing. "Oh no! If he disappeared because I keep calling him vegetable names, I'm really sorry. Broccoli, I'm really sorry," I said while pacing around my room. I packed up some shirts, underwear, pants, dog treats, dog food, and shoes in my suitcase. I went into the living room with my suitcase, telling my mom, "We need to take a road trip."

"Why?" my mom asked.

"Bean Sprout has disappeared."

"OK, we'll go tomorrow."

The Serval

By Serena Peters, age 9

Once upon a time there was a serval. Her name was Rachel. She had no friends and she really wanted one, and that is where the story begins.

Rachel decided she would go on an adventure to find a friend. She decided to go north. Soon night came along, and she had nowhere to sleep so Rachel had to keep on going until she came to a large rock. On the top of the rock there was a house. She had to get to the top of the rock because she was really tired. She climbed and climbed but when she got to the top it was morning, but she was still tired, so she knocked on the door of the house. A dragon answered. Rachel screamed and ran! She ran down the rock. She looked behind her. The dragon was chasing her. She saw a very thick bush. She soared through air and landed in the bush. The dragon went by without seeing her. Rachel turned around; there was a serval behind her.

"What's your name?" Rachel asked.

"Camille. What's yours?"

"Rachel. Do you want to be my friend?"

"Yes."

And they lived happily ever after until one day while they were going on a walk, they noticed the dragon on the path, so they started to run.

"Wait," the dragon called. "I just want to be your friend."

Rachel remembered what it was like to have no friends. She said, "Yes."

They all went back to the dragon's house and lived happily ever after.

The Race, Chapter One

By Vivek Punn, age 7

Once upon a time there lived a boy. His name was Gaurav. He was eight years old. One day there was a new student in his class. The new student loved racing and so did Gaurav, so the next day Gaurav said to the new student, "Do you want to race?"

"Sure," said the new student.

The next day Gaurav learned that the new student's name was Mace. Gaurav asked Mace if he would race with him. Mace said, "Yes, tomorrow we will race." All night long they practiced.

The next day Mace said, "I am ready. Where are we racing?"

"I don't know," said Gaurav. "Let's think about it. Oh, I know, we'll race from the jungle back to here."

"I am not ready to race yet," said Mace.

"Then we will race next week," said Gaurav. "Let's practice all week."

On Saturday Gaurav ran 20 miles. On Sunday Mace ran 20 miles, too. Sunday was the big day. They got ready. When they were all ready, they saw a stranger. The stranger looked weird. He was covered in brown, and he had a staff, and he rode a lion. He had long hair, too, but he was very quiet. The next day they saw him again but the next week they didn't, but the lion was there, which meant that the lion didn't belong to the man. The lion chased them back to school so they couldn't race that week. The next week was summer break so they could do it then.

In the middle of summer break, they camped in the jungle. The next day Gaurav got ready, but he couldn't find Mace. He searched the jungle but then he remembered that he was too scared to sleep in the jungle...

The Adventures of the Discoverers

By Nina Ulaganathan, age 8

My name is Natalie, the Newt. This is the story of how I made friends with a panther named Penny.

One day I was walking through the forest to find a book. I found a cave and went inside, but there wasn't a book in sight. Instead, there was a bunch of panthers. Thankfully, they were asleep, except for one. It tried to catch me, but it didn't because it thought that I was cute. It asked me what my name was. I said that it was Natalie the Newt. The panther said that her name was Penny. Then Penny said, "You better get out of here or you will be breakfast. Quick!" "See you on Sunday at the fields," I said.

The next day we made a tree house. Since I was so small I only put the nails in. The tree house turned out great. It was our secret hideout. Every day we planned a time and met there. We played Hide and Seek. I was not easy to find since I was so small. Sometimes I would get lost. We had so much fun and wanted to be friends, best friends, and we were. We had a fun time.

One day while we were playing Hide and Seek, a big bear came. It was coming towards me. I was really scared. I was afraid it was going to step on me. Luckily, Penny, the Panther, grabbed me and took me home. I thanked her and thought 'not every panther is bad.'

We stayed best friends for a long time.

Candy Land

By Kaia Flores, age 7

Chapter One – An Adventure (an excerpt)

One day there was a boy named Michal. Once he was playing a game called Candy Land. He saw a portal and went through. He saw lots and lots of candy. He saw a mint chip on the ground. He started to eat it but then saw his hands. He saw that he had turned into a gingerbread man. He said, "Where am I?" and he started to worry.

The next day he felt better. He sat down on a brownie, and then started to eat it. He found a gingerbread house. He ran to it and started to eat it. Then he swam in a chocolate ocean and drank a little. After that he made a snowman out of ice cream. He ate the snowman; his favorite part was the hat! He loved it because it was made of black licorice.

The Time Helen Told Me a Story

By Nakai Brock, age 8

So this is how it goes. Helen's grandchild was moving. He had a humidifier and the humidifier was shaped like an elephant. He liked it so much that he named it Elefante. He was about two, and he was moving with his mom and dad to New Mexico. His dad was already there. He could not bring his humidifier on the plane but he really liked his humidifier. So his mom called his dad and told him to get the same humidifier and his dad said, "I'll try." When he got there, he went in his room and saw his humidifier and he thought that humidifier had gone to New Mexico and into his room and waited for him.

Fodur, the Blue-Nosed Reindeer and the Quest for the Nose

– (an excerpt)

By Mace Drobac, age 9

Once upon a time, there was a reindeer named Fodur. He loved hearing stories about his uncle Rudolf. "I want to be like my uncle when I grow up," Fodur said.

"That's not possible," said his mother. "He had a red nose. You have a blue nose."

Suddenly, BOOM! A bomb had ruined the house. Then two figures appeared.

"We are here to protect our world from devastation, to unite all the fruits within our nation, to denounce the evils of truth and love, to extend our reach to the stars above," they said.

Bob! Bobita! Team Evil blasted off at the speed of light. "Surrender now or prepare to fight!"

Fodur stared at them. "You're evil," he said. "You're just an apple and a cantaloupe!"

"That's not the point!" said Bob. He jumped up to Fodur and grabbed his nose. "We have the nose! Let's go," he said.

Bob and Bobita jumped into their cucumber canoe and paddled away.

"My nose!" cried Fodur. "How do I get it back?"

"You must travel to the Land of Ice," his grandmother told him. "That is where your nose is."

Yellow

By Elijah LaCour-DeLyle, age 8

Yellow is the color of the sun
Yellow is in the middle
Of red and blue
Yellow is the color of daisies and sun dew
Yellow is like a good sweet meadow in the wilderness
Yellow is the egg yolk in an egg
Yellow is the color of the stars
And yellow is mixed with lava.

Black

Green

By Serena Peters, age 9

Green is the color of blooming spring
It sounds like birds when they sing
It feels of a gentle breeze blowing by
It's sometimes bitter, sometimes sweet
It smells like a rose
Green is luck.

Red

By Kaia Flores, age 7

Red is the light.
Red is an apple.
Red is your favorite color.
Red is a parrot.
Red is your clothes.
Red is paint.
Red is your shoes.
Red is a fox.
Red is a flower.
Red is a trike.
Red is wood.
Red is a marker.
Red is a lunch box.
Red is sunglasses.
Red is an eraser.
Red is a building.
Red is an ant.
Red is a nail.
Red is a leaf.
Red is lava.

Black

By Nakai Brock, age 8

Black is the night
Black is when you close your eyes
Black is a cave when it is night
Black is calming
Black is burnt marshmallows

Black

By Mace Drobac, age 9

Black is evil, sinister and dark.
He's like a bird of prey, or a shark.
He smells like charcoal, tar, and smoke.
He smells so bad he makes me choke.
Black tastes burnt cookies, gross and hot.
It makes me gag a whole, whole lot.
He feels like a monster that avoids your sight.
He sounds like dark silence, endless night.
Black's a menace, cold and gray
He shows no mercy so they say
Here he comes! Come run and hide.
Here's a room, let's go inside.

Across the Coast and to the Islands

By Jason Fu, age 9

The coast of Tanata was very interesting. It was interesting because nobody had ever figured out how to get from the coast of Tanata to the Tanata islands. Well, people have tried but always died for different reasons. You would not want to live on the coast of Tanata because you would probably die.

Only one family dared to live on the coast of Tanata. Their dream was to prove to the world that they could explore the Tanata islands. They were a family of five. The father was brave and acrobatic; the mother was intelligent and fast; the oldest, Ben, was brave, small, quick, and intelligent; the middle one, Mellissa, was a bright and acrobatic ten year old; the youngest, Austin, was a big, strong, and curious eight year old.

One day, while the family was watching American Idol and thinking of when they would explore the Tanata islands, their house jiggled. The family was so mesmerized in their thoughts that they didn't notice their house was cloned. One was floating towards the Tanata islands and one was standing on the coast of Tanata, just like normal. As we know no ship has survived going to the Tanata islands, but this case was different. This time it was a house and it was unintentional. Therefore, they had a chance.

Austin happened to peek out the window and saw that their house was drifting towards the Tanata islands. He alerted his mom. She knew just what to do. At first, she was worried that a catastrophe could happen at any moment. Then she thought, "What would be enough evidence to prove that we sailed across to the Tanata islands?" Then, like a light bulb, an idea appeared in her mind. Her light bulb glowed brightly, which meant a BRILLIANT idea. She got her computer, turned on her Skype camera, and pointed it at the ground. After that, she filmed what the world already knew of the Tanata coast (which was the front) then she trailed the camera down the ocean, to the Tanata islands, which they were drifting around, and saved the film. After showing the film of their journey to the world, the family became famous, and finally their wish came true.

The Crazy Disease

By Caleb Flores, age 9

One day Locks was taking his morning jog. He saw a crazy man trying to rob a bank. Locks cried, "Stop!" but the man pushed Locks out of the way. Just as the crazy man pushed him, Locks noticed he had spinning eyes. Locks yelled, "What is wrong with this man?"

He wanted to know what was wrong with the man. Locks chased the man and tried to tackle him. He failed, but there was nowhere the man could go. It was a dead end. Locks knew the man couldn't go anywhere so he went home.

The next day Locks went on his morning jog. Everybody was robbing each other and had spinning eyes. He saw people stealing, breaking stuff, and setting things on fire. It was madness. He wanted to investigate again. Before he could begin, people started chasing him. He ran around the corner and lost them. Locks leaned on a wall. He fell into something. The president was in the place that he fell into.

"Yes, the crazy disease is spreading," the president said.

"You did it! You made everyone crazy," Locks yelled.

"Yes, I did it, I spread the crazy disease because I am actually evil and you can't stop me," responded the president. "I will never give you the antidote, never!"

The president had his bodyguards chase Locks. He ran out of the president's lair before the president's bodyguards could get him. He went back to his base to get weaponry and armor. He needed to arm himself against the president's twenty-seven bodyguards. Locks was thankful his crazy uncle had given him his weaponry and armor. He went to the basement in his base to get weaponry and armor. Then, he went to get the antidote for the crazy disease from the president. When he went back outside, the crazy people captured him. Locks was knocked unconscious.

When Locks woke up, he was hanging over a pit of lava. Locks saw the president. "Goodbye kid," said the president. Locks took two swords out of the secret pockets of his pants. He sliced open the sides of the cage he was in. He jumped to the floor where the president was standing. The president's bodyguards jumped in front of Locks. Then, they all hit him. They didn't realize he had armor on. They hurt their fists. Locks pushed them out of the way. He ran after the president. The president ran. Locks caught up to him, grabbed him, and told the president, "Hand over the antidote!" The president threw smoke bombs. Locks couldn't see anything. The president kicked Locks to the ground. Locks grabbed his leg and threw him into a wall. While the president was lying on the floor, Locks searched the president's pockets. Locks found the antidote and took it from the president.

Locks ran to the top of the building. He was about to throw the antidote into the wind to heal everyone. Suddenly, the president appeared at the top of the building and threw Locks off. Locks was falling to the ground. He found a button on his suit that activated a jetpack. Locks switched on the button. He flew back to the top of the building. He hit the president on the back of his head and knocked him out. Then, he threw the antidote in the air.

After some time, everything went back to normal. The people were free of the Crazy Disease. The president was arrested. Locks got a medal of honor for defeating the president. It was very brave of Locks to defeat the president.

The Little Princess

By Chloe Christiansen, age 11

If you look at the trees, they seem so magical and mysterious. But really, they're just like us. We may also seem magical and mysterious, but really we're just big machines – full of cells and atoms working together to keep us alive. It's likely that trees can think and feel just like us. But it's hard for us to tell, since the trees cannot speak.

This is a story about a girl who could speak to trees. The girl was a princess, but not a happy princess like in most fairytales. By the way, this is a fairytale because it will include a princess and even a few faeries, but more about that later.

This princess was no ordinary princess. She had practiced her fighting skills since she could walk, and she was amazing at writing poetry. She had long, silky black curls, olive skin, and bright green eyes. She was very small. She could sneak away or hide so quietly that no one ever knew she had left.

Every night she climbed out of a huge window that overlooked a deep forest beneath the castle. She would sneak through the deep grass surrounding her home, tiptoe across the little footbridge over the little stream that wove through the town, and emerge into the dark, beautiful, mysterious trees. She would leap across the leaves and branches scattered across the forest floor. She would keep running until she reached the heart of the forest.

That was where her favorite tree was, a huge oak whose branches seemed to stretch across the universe. The tiny princess would walk up to its massive trunk and press her ear against it. She could hear water being pulled up from the ground, and it would soothe her. Sometimes, she stayed there for hours. The water rushing through the tree, and the voices of the trees singing to her, would lull her to sleep.

One day, she was making her way out of her window, when her mother walked into the room. She wanted to ask the princess about her garment choices for a dance that was coming up. When she saw her daughter climbing out of the window, she was furious. She ordered the royal guards to stand beside her bed at all times.

The princess was devastated. Listening to the trees was her escape from her life. It wasn't that she didn't like living in the castle, but sometimes all the attention and pressure of being a princess was just too much to handle. Her mother was always bothering her about what she looked like and whom she talked to. Everything she did was always under scrutiny. When she was with the trees she could just be herself.

She couldn't stand just staying in her room. So, one night she quietly chanted an ancient verse that a wise woman had once told her: "Abba mit ku, alum mot cor." Suddenly, the two men standing silently by her bed shed their armor. They became two beautiful young faeries. One had silky black hair that hung beneath her waist and deep violet eyes, and the other had soft white hair and piercing, warm blue eyes.

This was not what the little princess had expected. She was so surprised that she jumped back in fright. She hit her head on the windowsill and knocked off her precious crown made of gold inlaid with bright, clear emeralds.

"Don't worry, dear. We are not here to hurt you, but only to help you," said the white haired fairy, in a voice much older and wiser than fit her appearance.

"I don't understand!" said the poor frightened princess. She looked back and forth between the two faeries with her mouth hanging open.

"We are only here because of you. You called us here with your special words. What is it that you want?" asked the white haired fairy.

"Well, my mother, the queen, discovered that I had been sneaking away at night to be with the trees. Since then, she has confined me to my room. I loved visiting the trees. I could hear them talking to me. It always made me feel better. Can you help me go back to the trees? I could spend the rest of my life there."

"Of course we can help," said the silky black haired fairy. "Now I want you to listen very closely." The princess nodded her head vigorously. "I will give you my cloak of invisibility. You must put it on, and not take it off no matter what happens to you. For if you do take it off, you will find yourself right back in this room. And you will never be able to go back to the trees." The princess nodded.

The fairy continued, "You must go to the center of the forest, where the largest tree is. A freshly killed deer will be there with an arrow through its neck. Take out the arrow, and wipe the deer's blood on the edge of my cloak. A door will appear in the tree. Go through the door and you will meet our sister. You can tell her what you wish for. She will grant it instantly. Good luck."

With that said, the two faeries disappeared as fast as they had come, leaving only a faint scent of flowers and a sparkling, translucent piece of fabric on the princess's bed. The princess, now filled with anxiety, walked over to the bed and picked up the small piece of fabric. It unfolded into a billowing cloak that she wrapped around herself. She looked into her huge oval mirror. She was amazed to find that she was completely invisible.

She then climbed out of her window and ran the way she had so many times before. The only sign that she had ever been in the castle was the window that she had left open when she climbed out. She reached the huge tree in the center of the forest. She was so glad to see it that she forgot all about what she was supposed to do and ran to give it a big hug. Luckily, her cloak stayed tight round her and soon she remembered what the faeries had told her.

She saw the deer. She knelt, removed the arrow from the animal's neck, and wiped the blood on the edge of her cloak. Suddenly a sparkling golden door formed in her favorite tree. The trees whispered to her louder than ever, telling her to go in.

She walked up to the door and gently pushed it open. A fairy twice as beautiful as her sisters combined, with flowing caramel-colored hair, and deep golden eyes stood behind the door, waiting for the princess.

"Hello, little princess," she said in a voice as soothing as honey. "What is it that you wish for?"

The little princess paused, thinking of all the things she could wish for, but nothing came close to what she had wanted for so long.

"I want to live here, in the forest with you."

And to this day, the little princess lives happily with her trees, eating nuts and berries, knowing that finally she has a place to call home.

GONE

The Land of Lost Files

"Inspired by the lost files of Charlotte's computer"

By Elizabeth Peters, age 11

Prologue

So, Bob is a semi-crazy guy who 'thinks' his life is "amazingly exciting." It's not really that exciting. However, Bob types up his entire life everyday. Only Brittney, his pink haired girly, nerd daughter knows these awful secrets.

"Dad! Stop typing that dumb document! I need the computer for my science report," demanded Brittney.

"No, Brittney! I need it for my life memo. If you make anything I won't have enough room for my documents. Now get me a stick from the neighbor's yard to chew," said Bob.

"No. Just buy another Computer!" yelled Brittney.

"No, I'm too busy. I have to type up my life story," said Bob.

"I'm going to quickly dye my hair before school. Bye," said Brittney.

Britney ran upstairs and quickly spray-dyed her hair, grabbed her backpack, and left for school. About five hours later, during fifth period, she was still thinking about her fight with her dad.

"Get out a computer to type up your fifteen page report on the History of America. It will count for 50% of your grade," said her social studies teacher, Mr. Harrisburg. "I will be right back. I left my glasses in the teachers' lounge." He left the room. "Ring! Ring!" Brittney's phone was ringing. She answered it. It was her dad.

"What, Dad?" Brittney asked.

"My files, my documents. GONE!" said Bob sadly.

"You probably didn't save them," Brittney told her dad.

"No. I triple saved them. They're GONE," Bob said.

After Bob finished his sentence, screaming erupted in the room. Everyone was screaming, "My files, my documents are GONE." And at that inconvenient moment, Mr. Harrisburg walked in. "What is all this screaming about?!" he yelled at the class. Luckily for the children the bell rang, "Ring!!!" The class hurried out the door before Mr. Harrisburg could give them all detentions. As Brittney walked out she stopped by her locker to put away some books. Then she heard some students talking about what had happened in fifth period.

"What ya guys talking about?" Brittney asked.

"The lost files. They just disappeared. No one knows what happened," one of the group members said.

"Well, bye." Brittney said. She began to walk home from school. As she walked she thought, "What if I found the files? No way. I am a nerd, but that is an advanced computer problem. You would need an expert to fix that."

When she got home, her Dad was throwing a fit on the couch.

"Dad, seriously," said Brittney.

"I wish I had my files," her Dad wailed. "I wish you could fix it!"

'Pouf!' Suddenly, Brittney was in the computer!

"How ironic," Brittney thought.

She saw a road sign. It said, "Welcome to the Second Dimension"

"So, THAT is where I am," she thought. "Well, if I'm here might as well look for those lost files."

First I need to get into the Internet. A swirling portal opened up. She jumped through. That was easy she thought. Brittney was in a swirling tunnel with portals opening and closing every which way. She continued soaring through the Internet tunnel thinking about what to do when she noticed something very strange. Documents and files were flying out of the portholes and zooming down the tunnel. Then, she noticed something very, very bad. A huge, black portal loomed up. It was the end of the tunnel. She, along with files and documents were sucked in, "Whoosh!"

When she was inside. It looked like the lobby of an office building- except in the middle of the room sat a huge monster. It kind of looked like a huge bloated sack, with tiny lizard legs, and a squashed-up dragon face. It was eating all the files and documents! He spied Brittney. He galumphed over toward her with his mouth open. There was a scream and Brittney was eaten. A minute later he barfed Brittney and all the lost files and documents!

Turns out, he was poisoned by her hair dye. The portal opened and everything was returned to their computers. Now all Brittney needed to do was get out of the computer. Suddenly, she was jerked into one of the portholes onto a computer screen. Someone was emptying the trash! Screaming, Brittney was sucked in. Then, she was catapulted out of her roof top satellite dish into her back yard where her dad caught her.

"I'm sorry I was so into my documents. You are more important than that," her dad said.

"I love you Dad," said Brittney.

"I love you too," her dad said.

In the end, Bob became sane, and they lived a happy life together.

Bob the Pig and the Land of Puxxlepus

By Freya Edholm, age 11

Once upon a time, there was a pig called Bob. Bob was a special type of pig made out of a math worksheet, and decorated with Pentominoes. He absolutely loved math, puzzles, adventure, and his family. Therefore, he thought exploring the land of Puxxlepus would be perfect for him.

On his 20th birthday, he told his family that they were leaving for Puxxlepus that day. His children, Blues and Katy, were shocked.

"Daddy, what are you thinking? Aren't those Puxxles demons?" asked Blues.

"Yeah, Dad, those Puxxles are demons," said Katy.

"Look, Mom said so. So why aren't you listening to her?" echoed Katy. Bob assured Blues and Katy that their mother, Ann, gave them permission to go and would protect them. Fortunately, Blues and Katy agreed to go.

The next day, Bob, Ann, Blues, and Katy got into their van for pigs. Bob drove them to Puxxlepus. Ann took Blues, Katy, and the other piglets to an Ice Cream Parlor, while Bob went to the Council.

At the Council, Bob met the treasurer, $harpline, who taught Bob all about money. Since Bob loved math, $harpline let Bob do some of his money problems. Bob did so well that he was appointed Assistant Treasurer of Puxxlepus.

Bob also met the Principal of the Puxxlepus Public School, the President, and the Vice-President of Puxxlepus. They all saw that Bob had very creative thinking, could solve any brainteaser, and was a great mathematician. They decided that not only would he be Assistant Treasurer, he would also be the Boss of Math at the Puxxlepus Public School. Bob was exhilarated, for he loved the land of Puxxlepus.

That evening, Bob announced to his family about his new jobs, which meant that he would have to move to Puxxlepus. Fortunately, Ann, Blues, and Katy loved Puxxlepus. They had changed their minds about the Puxxles being demons. Bob and his family decided to move to Puxxlepus. They all lived happily ever after in Puxxlepus.

The Five Cats – White Kitty and the Drink of Doom

By Rishi Deshmukh, age 11

One day the five cats, White Kitty, Blackee, Friday, Autumn, and Woodruff were playing. White Kitty found a glass full of something red on the ground. On the side of the glass, it read: "WARNING: if you drink this you will morph in to a hamburger!" The other cats got hungry from playing so much. They went inside to eat, but White Kitty stayed outside. "It's just a dumb old label," said White Kitty to himself, while drinking the liquid, and morphing into a hamburger.

"AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!" he screamed. "I'M A HAMBURGER! Ooh, I taste good!" he said, biting himself. Before he could take another bite out of himself, Autumn came back out and ate him! White kitty had fun sliding down Autumn's esophagus and falling into her stomach.

While Autumn was outside she found a bottle on the ground with green liquid inside. "Mmm... I am parched. I need something to drink." So she swallowed the green liquid. It was the antidote for the red liquid. The antidote absorbed into White Kitty in Autumn's stomach. He turned back into a cat, but he noticed he was as tiny as a treefrog. "Oh no!" teeny weeny White Kitty screamed, "Oh, how small I am." Autumn burped and White Kitty flew out of her.

White Kitty ran and ran through the gigantic stalks of grass looking for the antidote's antidote, but found a carnivorous praying mantis instead! The praying mantis lifted him up in its claws. But just as White Kitty was about to be devoured, he found the antidote's antidote! He drank it, and grew bigger than Godzilla! He walked step-by-step, country-by-country, searching for the antidote to this giant making formula.

Finally, on the other side of the world he found the antidote. He drank it and shrunk back to his normal size. Then, he realized he wasn't big enough to walk across the world anymore! He looked around for a way to get home, but couldn't find one. What luck! He noticed he was in an airport! So, when no one was looking, he climbed into somebody's suitcase. The suitcase was carried on to a plane. During the flight White Kitty parachuted down to his house.

"Yay, I'm back in time for lunch!" The five cats ate and played.

Lick Smiles Chases After Gangster Wu

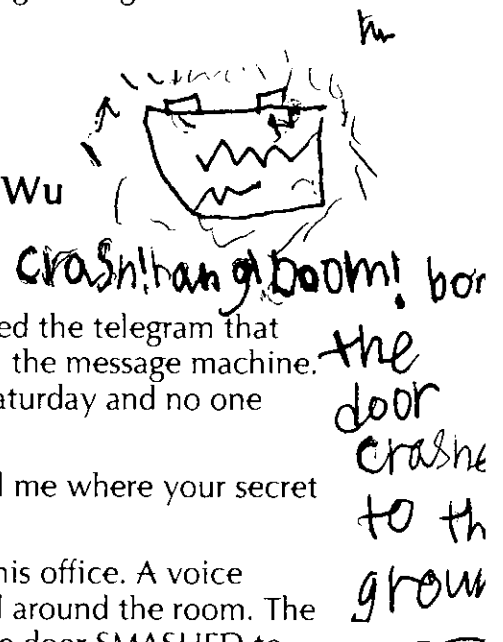

The Secret Stash

By Quincy Linder, age 10

Lick Smiles was in his office filling out paperwork when he received the telegram that would change his life. He tore the piece of paper off the role from the message machine. The sound echoed eerily around the room. It was midnight on a Saturday and no one was in his section of the building. The note read:

To Lick Smiles, from Wu. We have kidnapped all of your men. Tell me where your secret treasure is or I will be forced to kill your men and you.

Lick heard a bang. A bullet whistled through the wooden door of his office. A voice outside said, "Just wood, no problem." Several more bangs echoed around the room. The door drooped on its hinges. Then, "Crash! Boom! Bang! Bong!" The door SMASHED to the ground. Seven men ran into the room, "Put your hands up Lick," one shouted. But Lick had already gone.

Lick was not at all pleased. If this Wu person was gutsy enough to kidnap his men, then Lick could be sure that something bad was going on outside his building. He tried to think of strategies that he could use against this Wu person. But it is quite hard to think while you are sliding down an especially modified escape chute. So, he waited until the chute took him underground. Then, he pressed a button. The chute forked and dropped him off in the middle of a narrow passageway.

Lick walked to the end of the passage and took a key from his belt. He slid the key into the lock and opened the ultra reinforced steel door. He walked inside. Before him were thousands of jewels – diamonds, pearls, and dollar bills. It was the secret stash that he found when on another occasion he had defeated the “Evil Force” and saved an island. Lots of the fortune was still left.

“It’s about time I got a refill,” Lick muttered to himself, as he stuffed five thousand dollars into a secret pocket in his shirt. Then he went out of the room and closed the door behind him.

“Now to get some assistance,” he said. He went to the opposite side of the passage where an elevator waited for him. He went two floors up and entered a room.

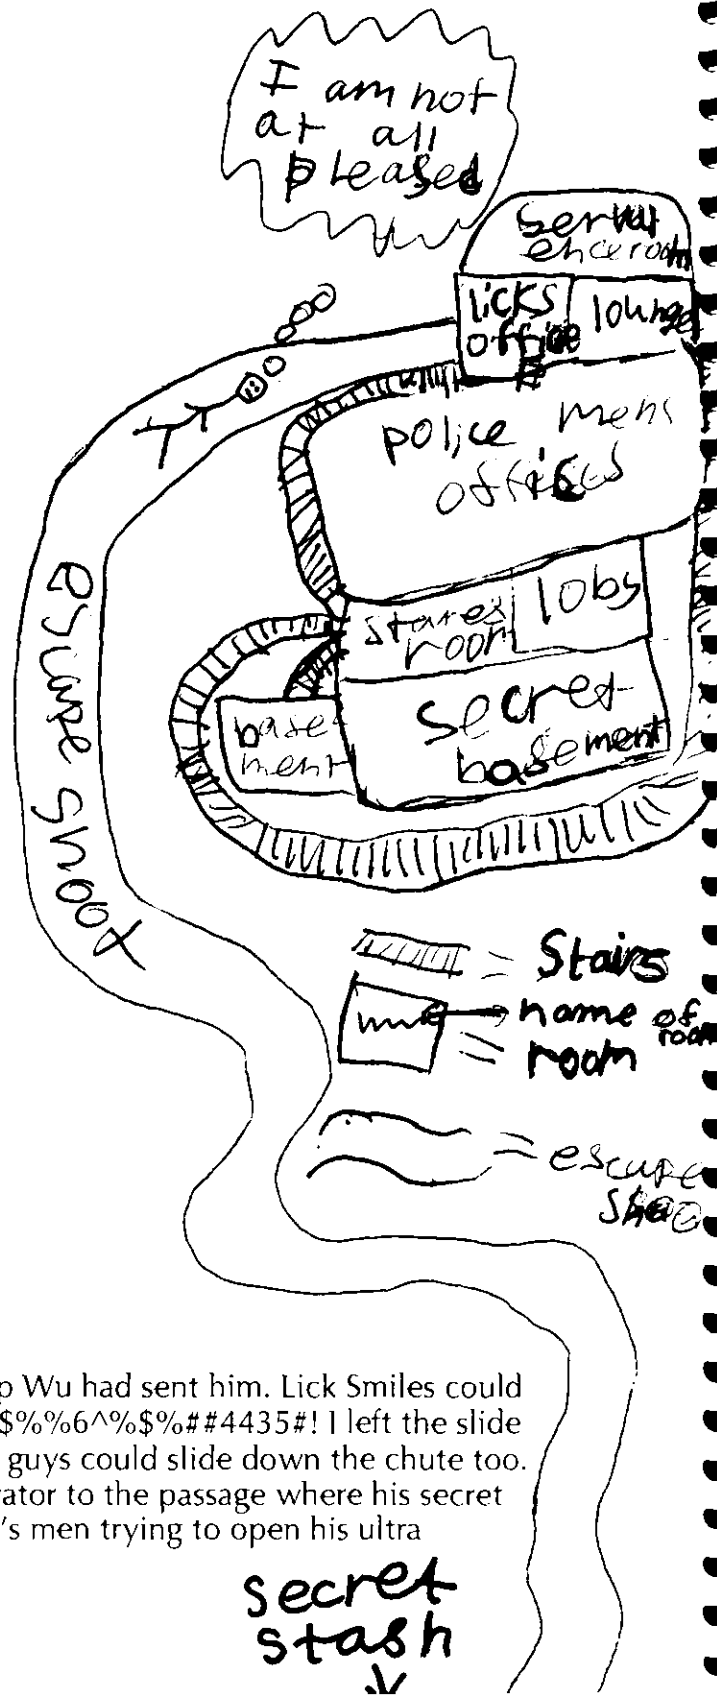

In the room there was a telephone and a computer. He brought up the monitors that showed him what was going on in the city. Everything was quiet except for a couple of cars. Apparently, nothing was wrong outside. But it didn’t make sense. Lick studied the screen closely for a minute or so then shouted, “I’ve got it! Somehow Wu is feeding me a loop on the video.”

Lick Smiles telephoned the army general. He asked, “Can I lead an operation?” The general said, “I can spare twelve soldiers. I will send a chopper to you but the rest of the soldiers are having medical checkups.”

“That’s not enough,” Lick said. “This guy has hundreds of men.”

Lick rebooted his computer and got rid of the loop Wu had sent him. Lick Smiles could see the army chopper in the distance. “OH @#$%$%^ᅓ#! I left the slide shoot open,” Lick exclaimed. He realized the bad guys could slide down the chute too. He ran to the elevator. He went down in the elevator to the passage where his secret stash was. Sure enough, there were several of Wu’s men trying to open his ultra reinforced steel door. One of them noticed him. "Hey, look it's Lick!" he shouted. They all ran at Lick. He only had one trick up his sleeve, but it might be enough to get him out of this mess. He went to the chute and slid down three floors to another passageway. He detached another key from his belt and slid it into the lock. Wu's men arrived in the passage. They ran at Lick. Lick opened a drawer and took out some explosives disguised as cigars. Lick threw the explosives at Wu's men and went to another elevator door. He went up for a while then the elevator stopped.

He climbed out the top of the elevator. He ducked an overhang and crawled along to a fake ventilator he had put there. He pushed the ventilator forward. He was now in the basement of the police station. Lick crept up the stairs and poked his head out of the basement. Bad luck! Lick was spotted by six of Wu's men. They ran over to him and yanked him out of the basement. They dragged him over to a chair and tied him up tight. Just then the twelve soldiers burst through the door, guns blazing. Wu's men sprinted away. One of the soldiers untied Lick; the others went after Wu's men. Lick and the soldier waited a couple of minutes until the soldiers returned.

"All Wu's men are waiting outside," said one of the soldiers. "There must be two hundred out there."

"We have to move out," said a sergeant.

"Not yet," Lick said. He lit a fuse to a stick of dynamite. "Okay now we can move out," he said as two hundred of Wu's men rounded the corner to the basement.

"We have ten seconds!" Lick yelled through the gunfire. Lick led the twelve soldiers. They sprinted towards the door to the basement. Then... "BOOM!!!!!!!!!!!" Wu's men and the twelve soldiers were killed as the police station exploded. Lick saw the explosion. Then, everything went black.

Unfortunately, Lick was the only one who survived. He woke up feeling terrible. He felt as if he never wanted to smile again. A doctor was leaning over him.

"He is alive," he shouted. Lick's son Jimmy Smiles stepped into his line of vision.

"Hi daddy," Jimmy said. "We thought you were gone forever."

"Oh really," Lick said. "Just how long have I been out?"

"Seven months," Jimmy said. "The doctor called me here when your brainwaves started spiking. The police station is almost rebuilt so everything is good. Except..."

"Except what?" Lick asked.

"Wu was in your vault. He survived the explosion and stole your stash. We tracked him to his house."

"Shall we go there?" Lick asked.

"Sure, if you're up for it," Jimmy said.

"Let's go then," said Lick.

So they went to Wu's house. Jimmy shot Wu. Wu died. Then Lick shot Wu's butler and reclaimed his treasure. The police station was rebuilt, and Wu's threat was extinguished.

Summer Camp

By Ansley Perryman, age 9

I can't believe my mom and dad sent me away to Camp Doring, or should I say camp boring, a summer camp in Florida. My friends said I shouldn't go because weird stuff happened there.

My first night was a mess because I am allergic to peanuts. Guess what it was for dinner? Yep, you guessed it, peanut butter sandwiches. I went to bed without dinner.

Next morning I was starving. I had some toast. Then I went to my first class, swimming. In my opinion it was the best thing about Camp Doring. Well let's just say I had more fun than on the first night, for sure. I met a girl called Natalia. She was really nice. We had a weird thing in common. Someone kept moving our suitcases into the woods or to the camp doctor's room. At first we thought it was our enemy, Katy. So, we played a prank on her. We put some hair remover in her shampoo. It made some of her hair fall out. However, we made a mistake. We found out it was actually just the cleaners moving our suitcases when they cleaned. "Oh, dear!"

I realized that camp wasn't about how cool you are, or getting away from your parents; it's about being happy and meeting new friends.

The Adventure Of The Secret Agent

By Pongsa Tayjasanant, age 10

Chapter 1: Tom

Hi, my name is Tom. I'm a secret agent for the U.S. with special talents. I have lots of snakes of every kind with special powers. Right now, I'm going to tell you about a mission I led that could have led to almost certain death. I rocketed through the galaxy to fight an army of things I didn't know about. You may ask why I had to do this. Well, the reason is, I had to save the president.

Now, for the story: I flew in to the secret base at lightning speed. "No sign of the enemy," I muttered to myself. I was alone apart from my snakes. I told two boa constrictors, "Find the enemy and report back." (All my snakes have a special talent.) I walked forward and heard something; something that sounded like an advancing army. Then, my boa constrictors reported back, "There is a huge army advancing towards us!" "CODE RED!" I yelled to all my snakes. We had about 15 minutes until the army reached us.

I decided to turn invisible. I put on my invisibility cape. I marched toward the enemy. I shot the power transformer for the base and everything went black. I snuck through a vent, and then I heard clanking – droid footsteps. I looked down and saw about 10,000 armed droids below me. I walked forward and stuck a camera on the wall so I could see what was going on. I shot a liquid force field onto the ground to hold off one branch of the droids. I found a hole in the floor and jumped through. I saw no enemy and advanced forward. I turned a corner and saw some monsters. Silently, I crept past them. I saw a droid. I knocked him out and took his memory chip. I reprogrammed it “to kill any droid in its path.” I put it back in for two minutes to reprogram his computer and took it out again. The droid marched off in the other direction.

I took the memory chip and plugged it into my computer. I found dimensions, scales, airways, and then, “Aha!” their plan to destroy Washington D.C. It contained diversions, ships, planes, and ground attacks. Meanwhile I heard the words: “TRAITOR!” screamed out by the leader of the droids. I guessed my plan was working.

I saw a person running across a hallway. I took off my invisibility cloak.

“I am Tom, agent for...”

“Stop!” he said.

“Because now I know who you are! You’re an agent for the U.S. So am I.”

“Right you are,” I announced. So I told him my plan, and he approved.

“I’m from location 25B76.”

I thought, “Something isn’t right.” I waved away my thought and checked my computer. I selected ‘dimensions.’ I saw a diagram and saw a weak point in the building. So I turned and asked, “What’s your name?”

“Cameron,” he answered. I told Cameron to go east and that I’d go west. So I raced through a vent and burst through the end of it and landed in the “control room.” I was smart enough to cling on to the wall. The room was full of monsters. I put on my invisible cloak – 3,2,1, I was invisible! I shot the control panel, and it exploded. The monsters fled the room.

Suddenly, I realized 10,000 droids were charging me! I quickly turned and hid in the vent. Two minutes later from the camera I planted, I heard the commander tell his troops, “Scour the area for any signs...” and then, “BAM!” The camera was destroyed. It shriveled up and burnt. So, I was on my own.

I heard a gust of wind from behind me and things suddenly got warmer. Out of the corner of my eye, I saw something red, a flame. I soon realized the droids had a flamethrower. They shot it at the vent where I was hiding! I turned my water gun on. “Whoosh!” The fire was extinguished. “Phew!” I said, “That was a close one.” Then everything went black. The heat from the flamethrower overpowered me. I awoke in the vent. The enemy had not found me. "How long had I been passed out?" I wondered.

I shot a hole through the vent where I was lying. I shot a grappling hook to the floor beneath me. I carefully climbed to the floor and put a camera on the wall. I ran through the door into a big hallway. To clear the hallway, I threw a little bomb down it. "Boom!" the bomb exploded. I ducked into a room. It was empty, nothing but eerie silence. Suddenly, 'CLANK!' the doors slammed behind me. "Huh?" I thought. "That was weird," I muttered to myself. I walked forward. "This looks like a mess hall," I said.

"Because it is," a voice said from behind me. I turned and saw Cameron.

"So, I see you've joined the dark side," I sneered.

"Yes I have," said Cameron.

"You are now my enemy," I said.

"Well..." he swung at me with his double-bladed sword. I quickly blocked the strike with my machete and deflected a bullet he shot at me. He shot another bullet at me. I dodged it. I threw my machete at Cameron. He blocked it. It dropped to the floor. He threw a sticky bomb, but it missed! It clung on to the wall. '2:00' it said. I threw a 6' x 8' piece of steel. It hit Cameron hard and made him fall backwards onto the floor. I approached Cameron. One by one, I threw ten bricks on the piece of steel. Just to make sure, I put a slab of concrete on the steel and ran out of the room. The door felt hot. The bomb blew up. A chill went up my spine. My knees turned to water, and I collapsed.

I woke up in a net. "Dang it," I muttered, "I have been caught!"

"Yes, you have," said a voice that sounded like a nail scratching against metal. I turned to see 10,000 droids facing me. I tried to move but no use. And out came... "No, I don't believe it," I thought. It was my previous boss, President Bush.

"Hello agent C78Cf67," he said.

"But. But..."

"Yes agent C78Cf67, America was too slow after all. I'm the best president that ever took the throne. Except that Obama guy, so that is why I created this army." And there, right before me, was his whole army of monsters, human warriors, and droids. The grand total of warriors in the whole army was probably 1,000,000. According to my boss, that is a bad ratio.

"My plan is to over run the city of Washington D.C. and capture Obama," Bush said. "People will think he is a bad president to let this army into the United States of America. Then, I will still be the best president in the history of the U.S. My droids have predicted that Obama will pass me in 'The Best Presidents List.' I will fall to number two. I can't take that."

"Were you ever number one?" I asked.

"Yes, I was, agent C78Cf67. Now you have two choices: you can perish at the hands of my army, or you can become a part of my army. Your choice."

"I want to perish at the hands of your army!" I exclaimed.

"Ok," said Bush. Suddenly, I dropped into the army. I crushed a droid, cut the rope that secured me, ran for my speeder, and sped away.

Chapter 2: The Battle of Life and Death

I immediately went to the White House. "Boss! Boss!" I panted.

"What?" said Obama.

"Bush is coming to take you sir."

"Okay, guard the border," he said. "And Tom, lead them into battle. I will give the other guards and their tanks."

"Yes sir," I said.

I lined up our troops. Right on cue, Bush's army appeared out of the sky. "Stand ready! FIRE!" And from the explosion, I swear, I saw stars in the sky. At 1:00 PM, the battle was in full swing. I was manning a cannon. The enemy was winning "the battle of life and death," as I called it.

I knew if the battle went on like this we would all die. So, I made a bold move. I snuck behind the enemy lines and planted a bomb. I kept on progressing up the ranks until I got to their gunship. From here they were sending in troops and covering them with defensive fire. I shot my grappling hook and hit the gunship. Then, I stuck my sword into the side of the gunship, pulled myself up, fired my gun at the engines, and jumped off. Instantly, it blew up. "Now, they can't send reinforcements, and we can actually win," I thought. I ran back to the battlefield. We were doing better. I started attacking from the back. I was quite successful. From that moment on, we wiped out the enemy pretty quickly. We had defeated Bush's army. After that win, Obama promoted me to highest ranking, field agent. And that's the end... for now.

The Knight in Black Armor

Inspired by The Hobbit

By Kalyan Narayanan, age 9

Once upon a time in Middle-Earth, there lived a man who's name was Arthur. Arthur Took, to be precise. He was a very adventurous man. One day, when he was walking through the market he heard Mr. Frank talking about a quest to the heart of the mountains of Balkan. Arthur immediately got excited. He walked over to Mr. Frank and asked, "Who is going there?" Mr. Frank said, "It is a team consisting of: Aver and Baser – two dwarves, Hamadun and Bronx – two elves, and of course, one human who we have not chosen yet. Arthur immediately applied for the spot.

The next thing he knew he had been accepted. Two days later the team left. (Now I must pause the story for a bit, to tell you that the team faced many dangers on their quest including dragons and snakes, and so on. I am only telling you this so you know that I am going to be skipping some minor parts, like when the team stopped in the dwarf city of Arakanese.)

For two days straight the team journeyed without stopping for rest. Until they met the dragon named Slaving, a deadly Rastofocorian type. It happened very quickly Baser found a large "tree" in their way. Aver took his axe and chopped at it. The axe bounced off as if it were made of sponge. Hamadun aimed an arrow at the middle of the "tree." Suddenly the tree roared, (Wait, the tree roared! Yup, the tree roared.) "EVERYONE DUCK!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!" Yelled Bronx. He was right. Just then a wave of fire rushed towards them. It nearly scorched Baser's hair. Arthur's swiped his sword on Slaving's legs. No blood was drawn. It just made Slaving angrier. By now, they knew it was a dragon. Slaving cut a gash in Arthur's left arm. "AAAAGGGGH!" Arthur yelled. His left arm was in serious pain. Hamadun had had enough. He climbed up a tree and shot an arrow in Slaving's mouth. That ended Slaving's life. Bronx quickly healed Arthur, who was still screaming.

Three days later the team stopped in the city of Arakanese. After picking up supplies they continued on their quest to the Balkans. Twelve days later they reached an opening in the 1,743rd Balkan Mountain. Before they entered, Hamadun gave them a pep talk.

"Friends, Dwarves, Elves, and Humans, I am here to tell you that our quest is nearly over...and to tell you the real reason why we are here. It is to find the Black Armor and to destroy the Black King."

"What?" Arthur said.

"That's suicide," exclaimed Baser.

"You're mad," Bronx mumbled.

"I never should have signed up for this," Aver said.

"Let's go," Hamadun said, and he walked inside the opening. The others had no choice but to follow him in. The inside was filled with skeletons. They lit a torch and continued. After what seemed like hours, they reached a door. They opened it. Inside was nothing except a round pedestal with the Black Armor standing on it.

"Who will don the Black Armor?" Hamadun asked.

"Not me," Baser said.

"Not me," Bronx said.

"Not me," Aver said.

"I will," Arthur said.

"WHAT!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!" everyone yelled.

"Yes, I will don the Black Armor," said Arthur calmly. He slowly walked up to the pedestal and donned the Black Armor. It was as if power was coursing through his veins – ultimate power! With one stroke of his hand, he made the magical Sword of Balkans appear.

"Now we must march to the Black King!" commanded Arthur in a deep resonant voice. First, they marched to different kingdoms to gain help for the war. Finally, they formed an alliance. It included five dwarf kingdoms, 18 human kingdoms, and one elf kingdom. The united army marched to Black Land.

The war began. Eight Kings who had sworn allegiance to the Black King entered the fray. They were ferocious fighters, killing anyone in their path. A quick swipe from Baser's sword killed one. Five minutes later, Hamadun shot an arrow in the chest of another of the kings. He vaporized into dust. The team killed five more kings. Arthur shot a zap of electricity from his magic sword, killing the final king. Then, Arthur found the Black King. He radiated pure evil power that made everyone feel fear and dread.

"I see you wear MY armor you idiotic fool. Now you shall die!"

"NO, NOW YOU SHALL DIE!" cried Arthur.

As they fought, the very ground seemed to tremble. Sometimes Arthur would be winning; sometimes the Black King. Finally, Arthur stabbed the Black King in the chest. The Black King was killed. Arthur was the victor of the battle. "Arthur, Arthur you won," cheered the team. There was no response from Arthur.

"Please take off the armor, Arthur, please," pleaded Aver.

"NO," said Arthur's voice from within the armor. The ground shook with the sound.

"Please, Arthur, please. Take off the armor," again demanded Aver.

"NO," said the voice of the armor. "Yes," said the voice of the true Arthur.

"NO!"

"Yes!"

"NO!"

"YES!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!" The armor flew off revealing Arthur. He took the magic Sword of the Balkans and destroyed the Black Armor.

"AHHHH!!!!" screamed the armor.

"That armor was wicked," said a relieved Arthur.

"WE HAVE WON!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!" the team cried.

The Poisonous Kale Chips

By Charlotte Glen, age 11

Once upon a time, there was a flock of ducks. Their names were Marty, Fred, George, Bob, Pacifica, and Britney. They lived on a floating island on the planet of Chipotle, and they loved to eat kale chips. It was their favorite snack. But then, one day, George accidentally ate a poisonous kale chip! He passed out. "OMG!" exclaimed Britney. They rushed George to the hospital. When they got to their room, the doctor announced that George had food poisoning! "OMG!" said Britney as she reached into the bag of kale chips. She ate one and Britney fainted too!

"Hmm, that's strange, I'd better sample one of these kale chips to make sure they're safe!" said Bob, and soon after he did, he fainted! The doctor was 'confuzzled.'

"I am going to have to test these kale chips in my lab!" he said. After an hour, the doctor came back out. Britney, Bob, and George had all un-fainted by that time.

"We have had other cases of the exact same thing, so I went out and bought some other bags of kale chips to see if they were contaminated by the same thing, and they were. So, I put out a meter to detect any changes in the air status. It turns out that a wave of energy went over the planet and has contaminated all the kale. All the bad kale chips will be cleared from the stores and replaced with good kale chips. When this is accomplished, an announcement in the news will tell you that they are safe to eat," said the doctor.

"OMG!" said Britney.

"You will have to resort to eating potato chips during this time," said the doctor.

"NOOOOOOOO!!!!!" yelled Bob.

"This is horrible!" exclaimed Marty.

"What are we going to do?!" screamed Pacifica.

"I can't live without kale chips!" yelled Fred.

"Oh no, this is terrible!" said George.

"OMG!" exclaimed Britney.

The ducks were devastated. On their way home, they stopped at SpaceMart to stock up on freeze-dried potato chips. When they got home, Bob was the first to be brave enough to taste the potato chips. "These are pretty good!" said Bob, nodding his head. They all reached into the bag to try one.

"They're almost as good as kale chips!" exclaimed Marty.

"Dee-licious!" said Pacifica.

"Yum!" said Fred.

"I love potato chips!" said George.

"OMG!" exclaimed Britney.

They put the bag of potato chips on a pedestal that was next to the pedestal with the bag of kale chips on it. From then on, they ate potato chips frequently. Of course they still bought kale chips when they were available again, but they also ate potato chips along with them. And that is the story of how this flock of ducks came to love potato chips.

The Thief

A Police Report

By Matthew Roberts, age 9

New York Square, 9:15 p.m.

A man walked into a building on ~~New York~~ Square. He killed two guards and grabbed five files. He took one of the files and torched the building. He got into the getaway car that he had parked behind the building.

He drove to an airport in ~~New York~~. He got on a plane and he flew to ~~Moscow, Russia~~. A ~~CIA~~-agent was told to track him down. He got on his tail and tried to track him down to arrest him. The ~~CIA~~-agent tracked the thief to his last known position, ~~Moscow airport~~ in ~~Russia~~. The ~~CIA~~-agent searched the airport looking for him. He looked everywhere. The thief was nowhere to be seen.

He upgraded his search to all of ~~Moscow~~. The agent located the thief in a hotel on ~~Cannon Court~~, a ~~KGB~~ outpost. The ~~CIA~~ agent called the ~~US Navy Seals~~. The ~~CIA~~ agent and the ~~US Navy Seals~~ surrounded the outpost. The thief ran out of a backdoor. He climbed over a wall and stole a car. The ~~CIA~~ agent saw him leave. He jumped into his car and chased the thief to Paris.

The ~~CIA~~ agent stalked the thief for two days. The thief was hiding out in an apartment. The ~~CIA~~ agent found the building. Finally, the thief left the apartment. The ~~CIA~~ agent had his chance. He opened the door to the thief's apartment and set off a trip wire with his feet. He heard a ping and the house exploded. The CIA agent was thrown back fifteen feet into a wall. He died. The thief went on the run.

Two weeks later the US army located the thief in Berlin Germany. As soon as the army found him they called the CIA and the Navy Seals. They went to the apartment he was staying in. They were about to open the door with C4 when shots rang out inside the apartment. They blew the door open and found the thief dead. They heard a crash and someone jumped out the window. They took their guns and shot at him. He was wounded and surrendered. He was a KGB agent sent to recover the files. He told the CIA about the thief's plot to blow up Hoover Dam. He said the files included a plan of the dam's construction. The CIA agents thanked the KGB agent for helping to save America and let him go.

The Wall

By Finn Mennuti, age 11

Dedicated to the Baldoni family

Once upon a time there was a twelve-year-old boy named Ian. Ian lived in Pellmellia, a very hard place to live. Now Ian had mean parents. They locked the food up, hid the bed sheets, and they beat him. One night, Ian decided to run away. He snuck out of bed and crept downstairs. He stole all the food he could fit into his backpack, packed all his clothes, a slingshot, and a radio and put them in too.

"It's going to be hard to get out," he thought. "They lock all the doors and windows." Ian was a very good boy. He would never do this purposely unless his life depended on it; however, he broke a window. He grabbed his backpack and quick as a flash, he leapt out the window. The breaking glass woke his parents. They jumped out of their bed and ran downstairs. "Max!!!" yelled his mom, "Ian's gone!!!"

"Tell me something I don't know, Sarah!" yelled his dad. "Release the hounds!"

The hounds chased after Ian. It was dark; he was running hard, and then he... tripped! His future didn't look too bright. The dogs were right behind him. In front of him was a wall. "Damn it!" he yelled as he crawled backwards. He saw the lead dog about to catch up with him. He scooted backwards until he was almost touching the wall. The dog jumped. Ian leaned away from the dog's path so it would hit the wall. Ian's head touched the wall. He felt a warm sensation; he heard a buzzing hum; and suddenly, he was transported inside the wall.

"Where am I?" thought Ian.

"You're in the wall," said someone.

"What's the wall?" asked Ian.

"The wall is like a transport system, it takes you where ever you want to go. Lets you see whatever you want. Lets you do whatever you want," said the voice.

"By the way, I'm Luke what's your name?"

"My name's Ian," said Ian. "Question, if I wanted, say, um, a new family. Could I have one?" asked Ian.

"Yes, but there's a catch you must spend a year in a haunted house!"

"Really?" asked Ian.

"Nah, I'm just messing with you," said Luke. "The door is right over there."

"Thanks for all your help," said Ian.

And with that Ian walked through the door. There was a “whoosh!” sound. He started spinning; he felt every color and saw every noise. He woke up on a couch with four people leaning over him.

"Hello, Ian," said Nick, the man leaning over him. "We're your new family. I'm your father, Nick. This is your sister Creegan, your mother Karen, and your brother Luke."

"You must be starving," said Karen. "We'll make you a peanut butter and jelly sandwich."

His new parents left the room. His new brother Luke sat on the couch.

"Wait," said Ian, "your name is Luke?"

"Luke can't talk yet," said Creegan.

"Luke, you've helped me more than you know," said Ian.

"Who wants milkshakes?" yelled Nick from the kitchen.

"Yay!!!" said Creegan and Ian.

"I think this is going to be a great place to live!" thought Ian.

The Haunted Country

By Tyler Keen, age 9

One day, when I was having dinner with my friend Scott, he told me about a ghost that rose out of the river Ragubanaja on a full moon. He claimed that it was a real story. "I'll be okay," I said. As I was driving back home, I came to a fork in the road. I choose the road on the left, since I usually go that way.

After a few more miles, my car stopped. I got out and opened the hood. My battery had run out of power. Suddenly, I heard the sound of snapping twigs. I looked to see what it was. It was Scott! Now, his face was pale and his eyes we're red. I called his name. He didn't answer. Quickly, I grabbed my suitcase and ran.

I walked for hours and hours through the night. Finally, I came to a forest. Exhausted, I lit a fire and made a breakfast of oatmeal that looked like dirt. I looked around at my surroundings. The trees looked like they had faces and arms. "I must be seeing things," I said. When I woke up, the trees were moving towards me and they were saying: "Kill him, kill him!" I didn't need to hear them any more. I threw a stick that was on fire at them and set the forest ablaze.

After several days, I came to a river. I was about to take a drink from it, when I saw Scott. I was about to talk to him, but he was still pale, and he had red eyes. So I ran away from him. Several days later, I found my car. I looked at the battery again. Someone had cut the power cords! "Who did this?" I wondered. I retraced my steps back to the fork. I had taken the wrong road!

I took the right turn and I walked to my house. I went inside. In the living room I found Scott! I was stunned. He just laughed.

"All those times you saw me, I was wearing a costume. Pretty good, right?"

"Sure," I said. "You really scared me."

"That forest was remote controlled for a movie. You set off the detectors." After that, we talked and ate. Scott said I seemed like a good actor. I agreed.

Poetry

Time

By Finn Mennuti, age 11

Time is constantly fading, lost forever.

What has happened to yesterday?

I fear we will never know.

We never recycle it,

We don't know how yet.

What will happen when we run out of time?

I worry for humanity.

Our time is rationed;

We use it constantly,

Wasting it, without regret.

But what happens when we worry about time?

Will there be wars?

Riots?

Or peace and love?

Time fades away

In life and earth

For evermore,

Get used to it.

The Subject Tonight is Laughter

By Pongsa Tayjasanant, age 10

The subject tonight is laughter.
Tonight
I am happy.
My happiness spreads all over like a new invention.
Laughter,
laughter,
laughter,
I can't get enough.
I will soak
my bones in laughter
for the rest of my life.
Laughter is endless like numbers
in math.
You can never get too much laughter or happiness for that matter.
Laughter
and happiness are the keys to life.

What is Hate?

everything
I see.

Joy is God dancing and singing.
Joy is one of the greatest feelings
you can have.

Why, why is it so great?
Because it enlightens
the Body with the Joyfulness of God!

Determination and Belief

By Caleb Flores, age 10

My determination
Is like a wrecking ball
Breaking through a wall,
Failure tries to Mess me up
By pushing me around,
Packed in a punch.
But belief in my wise-self
Conquers my fear
And everything standing in my way.
My determination and belief
In my wise-self
Always stays strong like a tree.

Determination is telling yourself to keep going.
Determination is like smashing
a brick wall until it breaks.
It is what makes you think and work and play.
It is what helps you win
the Game

life.

The Secret to Beauty

By Freya Edholm, age 11

I know the secret to beauty
Divine joy, love, and bliss.
I know how to feel this feeling,
By giving God a kiss.

Sunset on the Sea

By Elizabeth Peters 11

The day is done
and night is swelling up.
But now day and night give a gift-
A sunset on the sea.

The sun is just a sliver.
The clouds are red.
The sun's light jumps like a rainbow from the water.

Day and Night are harmonized.
This is a gift from Sun,
Night,
And Nature that nothing else could give.

The Phoenix is Rising

By Matthew Sloan

From the shadows the Phoenix is rising
Sweeping through the depths of my suffering,
His flaming wings scatter Grief's ashes to the four winds,
Dissolving them in flames of joy!
Desires, forgotten dreams, heart's love,
Become a spiraling pillar of golden flame,
Borne on the Phoenix's wings to alight like a dove
At the gateway to infinity.
"Anything is possible,
What does your heart yearn for?"
From the shadows the Phoenix is rising!

Poetry Imagery

A Thorn

By Sita Chandrasekaran, age 14

If I were a thorn on a rose
I would prick your finger
To protect my flower
I am not vicious
I only hurt if I have to

A Cherry's Throne

By Sowmya Chandrasekaran, age 13

If I were a cherry,
I would lie comfortably
On lined layers of whipped cream
Atop an original sundae
Knowing I'll be first to go.

Siri

By Reza Navadeh, age 11

If I were Siri,
I would answer every question you ask,
I would find you the nearest market,
and I would help you with every task.

If I Were a Cat

By Luke Chacon, age 12

If I were a cat,
I would bound away
And chase the mouse
Of eternal happiness

Records

By Mariah Stewart, age 13

If I were a record
I would give the gift
Of events past,
With an eye to the future

I would give golden treasures
From Greeks to Romans
Their olives and spears
From British tyranny
To Yankee independence
From Trojan horse
To the Crusades
I would fill minds with past splendors,
Promises, and inspirations

Dragonfly

By Kelly Olivier, age 14

If I were a dragonfly
I would dart and zoom
Over fields and flowers
And the wind would
Whisk away my worries
So that I can fly free

Santa Cruz

By Adam Larrimore, age 14

Sand everywhere, itching, irritating
...must dig
Clouds gently make their way to and fro
Along the boardwalk
Hot, noisy, bustling...
Smell of funnel cakes and corn dogs, cotton candy,
Sweet and abundant in the air
Blurs of people walking by...groups
Which group am I?
Waves crash. Girls screech. Boys loiter.
Kaw, kaw, kaw...Pelicans in the air.
Blaring barker, "Step right up, folks...toy...
Then home again.

If I Were a Clock

By Lucas Washburn, age 12

If I were a clock

If I Were...

By Kieran Rege, age 14

If I were a planet
I would have rings
Radiant and glowing golden.
I would drift in space,
Endlessly going in circles
Bound to find more planets.
Then I would shine my rings
And know true friendship.

If I Were a Shadow

By Shubha Chakravarty, age 13

If I were a shadow...
I'd follow you around
I'd mime your moves
But never make a sound
I'd chase you 'round
Wherever you move
And on the sly
I'd mock your groove.

Simile and Metaphor Poems

What Will Become?

By Kieran Rege, age 14

Could Earth be God's experiment
Product of a heavenly science class
Of such inspiration and clarity
He made his own world?

Poured some water for life to grow
Shined a sunlamp to balance an ecosystem
And a nightlight to pierce the darkness
And developed a presmatique spectacle?

If so...then came a curse
A mold, claiming everything in its path
Our of control His people are,
Taking advantage of their disposables

God watches over them, worrying
Unsure of what their future holds
And if He doesn't know what will happen,
How can we?

Sun Flowers

By Jeydie Pondler, age 12

Sunflowers light up my life.
High fashion little girls,
They grab my attention
With their bright bonnets.

Sunflowers light up my life.
On days when I'm feeling sad
My bright yellow jacket
Makes me feel like a sunflower.

The Shooting Fountain

By Reza Navadeh, age 11

A shooting fountain,
Like a dolphin,
Hovering high in the air,
With a few milliseconds,
To take a breath
And dive back again.

God's Eye

By Sierra Sholes, age 13

The moon is God's eye
Which he uses to spy
On little children tucked away
Under covers 'til the day

A Child's Ball

By Kelly Olivier, age 14

Each night before I go to sleep
I look out my window at the moon.
Rolling across the sky,
Night after night, it slowly deflates,
A child's ball with a hole in it,
Until only a sliver remains.
Then patched like new, it re-inflates.

Who is Poetry?

By Sowmya Chandrasekaran, age 12

Poetry is a true companion.
You can tell her anything.
And when you ask for secrecy
She'll veil your heart with words.

But she can be quite open, too
With feelings and emotions
She'll cry with worry, cheer with joy
The result can be very moody

Poetry is sure to inspire you
She sometimes tells great stories
Her words so expressive, alluring
You'll know you've found a friend

Diamond

By Evan Rose, age 12

A diamond is shiny and sharp
Pretty and hard
Diamonds are rare and valuable
Reflective and clear
Like a thousand mirrors
Diamonds are the Earth's beauty

Personification Poems

Little Miss Diamond

By Sowmya Chandrasekaran, age 13

Little Miss Diamond's a bit of a pig
She poses and preens
She doesn't give a fig
Truth be told, she's a stuck up queen

She shines great flashes
She thinks she's the chief
She bats her pretty lashes
As we plastic rings watch in grief

The Sad Pencil

By Reza Navadeh age 11

Pencil was sad and out of joint
He had broken his lead and lost his point.
Instead—how sad! He was replaced by Pen.

The White Board

By Jeydie Ponder, age 12

Her clothing is all white.
You can write on her
Whenever you like.

She attends every class
All the year long.
She'll hold as many words as you like
'Cause she is tall and strong.

Trees

By Lucas Washburn, age 12

Trees are hardy
Slow and tardy
If a tree asks for a race
Don't be nervous
For it will take him years
To match your pace

Two Perspectives

By Sita Chandrasekaran, age 14

A Gardener's Thanks...

The trellis lends a helping hand
To her friend, the beautiful vine.
She holds the flowers way up high
To the generous, blue, blue sky.

The Vine's View...

My trellis is a helping friend.
Through rain and shine, 'til season's end
She never lets me hang too low.
She helps me bloom; she helps me grow.

Pens

By Mariah Stewart, age 13

Pens can be sly
As they cross the page
Pens on the fly
As they take the stage

Pens on the run
Get the words out fast
Pencils aren't fun
They don't even last.

Pencil never
Will outdo the pen
By being clever
Not now, not then

Mosquito

By Percy Jiang, age 14

"I need blood! I'm starving!"

Says the little mosquito with an empty stomach
He knows humans hate him,
But he is thirsty, more than sorry.
He sits on a little boy, imperceptibly
Hesitating for one crucial second.
"Should I rob his blood?"

Bang!

The boy sees him first.

Alliteration and Onomatopoeia Poems

Thunder Storm

By Luke Chacon, age 12

Thunder booms and Lightning crashes through the Air as the storm moves
Toward the city.

Tornados howl, and
Rain pitches from the sky.
The cold wind moans and groans,
And houses creak.

Slowly but surely
Lightning and thunder
Fade away. The storm moves on.

And the howl of wind and Tornadoes recede to the gentle
Whoosh of a breeze.

The sky clears and a rainbow
Smiles on the city.

Symphony of Sound

Name: Sita Chandrasekaran, age: 14

A leaf lingers in the air as it gently floats down
Trees sway in tender winds; click - clack; branches meet
Fluttering butterflies flap their frail wings back
To the rustling green grass; where the silent stag - crackle!
Steps on the resting leaf, while the rabbit rapidly thumps,
Flattening the forest floor with rhythmic tempo.

Bobcats purr with alto voices, resting under shades of giants
A bustling brook murmurs as she trickles daintily through,
All in time for Mother Nature's symphony of sounds when Whoosh - an oblivious car cruises by the refined orchestra.

Slip and Slide on Concrete

By Sierra Sholes, age 13

Splish, splash.

Oops. CRASH!

The Cookie

By Reza Navadeh, age 11

I just can't wait to eat a cookie.
Crimbling and crambing,
Crumb will fall upon my seat.
I'll dip it in milk
And say, "mmm" and "ahh,"
I go to the pantry
To find my desire,
And then Mom says, "NO!"

Making a Veggie Salad

By Sowmya Chandrasekaran, age 12

Cut the carrots nice and clean
Peel the pickles, dark and green
Dice tomatoes, fine and square
Then chop, chop, chop, if you dare!

Mix in a bowl; don't forget the salt.
Then stir and stir; there can be no fault.
After you're done, it's time to eat
Hear the crunch and enjoy your treat.

A Fish in Trouble

By Kieran Rege, age 14

I am a feeble fish
Like a wandering cloud of the sea
Careful, colorless, cold

When "WHOOOSH"
Like a dart, something zips by

Then "CHOMP"
A shark...swimming around me
Like a swarm, I feel it coming close

"CRUNCH" '
Another one zips by!

This can only mean one thing.
FEEDING FRENZY!

Poems from the Ananda Meditation Retreat Fieldtrip May 2012

Babaji's* Cave

By Sowmya Chandrasekaran, age 13

We walk calmly, with a steady pace,
Following the leader, twigs snapping.
We come to a stop. Down below
A parade of stairs leads to a door—
Invitation to concentration.
Silence looms. Dark walls chill
As we meditate in Babaji's Cave.

*Babaji is a revered Indian yogi.

Lizard

By Sierra Sholes, age 13

If you find a lizard
Be proud you found a wizard.
The way it blends
And hides in bends
Its magic has no ends

The River

By Jeydie Pondler, age 12

It runs past
With a glimmer
Its bright green water
Begging to be touched.

When I look
Down the steep cliff
From the bridge above,
I am afraid
Of dropping
Into the River.

My fear of heights
Turns me away.

Morning

By Sita Chandrasekaran, age 14

I lay in bed—quiet, calming
Noisy birds sing—loud, chiming
Eyes dart open—alert, watching.
Sunlight floods the sky—bright, spreading

I'm out of bed, careful, walking
Steps call like birds, loud, creaking
Girls roll around—awake, groaning
We whisper, one of us still sleeping

The River Within

By Mariah Stewart, age 13

I feel a river
Rushing through me
Flowing in my veins

Its cooling waters
All within me
Flowing up and down

My inner river
Calms me, cools me
Flowing inner peace

The Rope Swing

By Lucas Washburn, age 12

The wind in my face
The sun in my eyes
'Tis a fun game

Watch out for the tree
Once your friend
Now your enemy

21 Blackjack

By Evan Rose, age 12

"21 blackjack! I have won!"
Says Adam, sure
The game is done.

"Not so fast," I coo.
"Joker always wins"
So the joke's on you.

Confusion

By Shubha Charavarty, age 13

Writing poetry is like Wandering
In a dark tunnel
The noises,
The dark confusion...
Arrgh!

Rhythm Rhyme
Such a Hard time

Suddenly
A light...
Hope
Is in sight

It is far far
Long Tough
And hard

Will you go
Or forfeit all?

Wisps of Nature

By Rico Barron, age 14

A breeze glides
Through trees
Whistling the breath
Of a thousand wisps
A slithering tail
Slips out of sight
A bird's wing
Marks the earth
With a shadow
A mountain lion
Clenches its claws
Against a tree
To hunt its prey
Bears roar
Coyotes howl
Falcons screech
Stars fly
Fish splash
Nature holds
And nature lets go.

Peace and Tranquility

By Luke Chacon, age 12

A small jet of water
Shoots out from a fountain
Into a pond. Water plants
Float peacefully on the Surface, and insects fly
Through the air.
Occasionally, a fish jumps
When I get close.
This is peace and tranquility.

The Temple Cat

By Adam Larrimore, age 14

Pitter patter...soft paws
Push into the dirt.
Rustle, crinkle...a feline shape
Slinks slyly out of the bushes
Wandering to and fro.
My hand summons the creature.
It sniffs me.
I caress its fur as soft
As the clouds themselves.
Thinking of a name—he Reminds me of a
Bright summer morning,
Not too sweet, not too sour—
"Orange Juice."

The Cabin

By Max Lussier, age 14

Our cabin is called Peace of Mind.
Nice and small,
But cramped when
We all pile in.
There's a room with a couch.
There's also the kitchen.
There's a loft with two beds and a fan.

At night Peace retreats
When we play our games
And yell back and forth
Until we all sleep
With a snore or two.

Then the morning comes.
We're up bright and early
And it starts all over again.

Definition Poems

A Snake

By Luke Chacon age 12

A slithering reptile
Venom dripping from its Fangs, legless, staring,
Always ready to strike
Snake

Silence

By Mariah Stewart, age 13

When you hear music
You listen to notes
But have you heard the silence?

Silence is the drama
Of crescendo, a finale
Silence is the doom
Of execution, the fear

Sometimes, silence is everything

Irritation

By Sowmya Chandrasekaran, age 13

Irritation buzzes like a bee
Swarming about so noisily

Irritation is what I feel
When the ants my picnic lunch do steal

It's what a girl feels late at night
When baby brother starts to fright.

Irritation the ear does stalk
When talker talks, and talks, and talks.

Look here! Irritation for one
Could be consolation to some.

Kindness

By Jeydie Pondler, age 12

Kindness is a helping hand
It makes you friends throughout the land
Kindness is a living tree
Rising, flowing all through me

The Spiritual Path

By Cassidy Norfleet,

Manifested as a single seedling,
Self-Realization took place,
Sprouted from God's creativity,
Expressing Itself throughout space.

As constellations and nebulae took form, so did we.
Our hearts illuminated with light,
Delusions darkened into night.
Skewing our sensibility.

Few grasp the depth of enlightenment,
Yet the Ones who aspire, are wise beyond comprehension.
Realizing they're alike to kindred brethren.
No disparities exist, a complete amalgamation.

Connected to a vibrating frequency beyond delusion,
An exponential similarity between land and ocean.
No death can be present when birth-less,
Leaving an empty vessel, the soul effloresces.

Some darkness resides in each of us.
The ones who have needled it out,
Watch it dissipate and burn, making it scarce,
Through omnipresent Cosmic Bliss.

Editor's note: Cass Norfleet is a graduate of Living Wisdom School, now finishing his freshman year in high school. His poem was inspired by his reading of Autobiography of a Yogi, by Paramhansa Yogananda.

Reflections on The Point Reyes Field Trip October 2011

Every year our middle school goes on a field trip whether by foot, ferry or van. When you hear the word middle school van, you might think of a tame version of a school bus, but don't let that deceive you because, a middle school van can be an explosively random, scary, emotionally unbalanced pool of hormones, or a demonically dreary, mind numbing and eerily sleepy experience....

Conversation in the van is one of the most random strings of words woven together that I have ever heard. If I were to start a conversation about the president, it might jump to his hair, to hamburgers, to what type of cheese is the best for aliens. You couldn't go one minute without getting interrupted or without the subject changing....

A lot of the van's noise level can be determined by where you travel. For example, if you were to take the middle school to a candy or ice cream parlor and tell them they could get anything they wanted, you would be asking for big trouble. Survival tip: don't give a middle schooler the key to a sugar plantation.

~ Adam Larrimore

While we were driving to the Lawrence Hall of Science on our Fall field trip, there was an amazing view of San Francisco Bay. There were so many tall buildings and a lot of houses and trees. When we got to the Lawrence Hall of Science, one of my favorite exhibits was called The Sphere. By a push of a button, I could see the recent earthquake in Japan, the tsunami that followed, our earth, and also our moon. The earthquake caused a lot of damage to the countries of Japan and India. This caused a huge amount of flooding in Japan and India. The earthquake actually made the earth split in two parts and go into two different directions! The shaking caused a tremendous amount of damage to the houses in Japan and India.

The earthquake forced the ground into a shape like a hill. The two sides of the split were different, as one part of the split would go up and the other would stay down. The tsunami caused a lot of damage to the people's houses. Many were destroyed. This natural disaster also caused great economic crises. Many people died from the earthquake and the tsunami.

~Jeydie Pondler

Our first field trip of the year to Point Reyes on October 3, 2011, was an incredibly interesting adventure...including the discovery of some antiques (pre 1998)... When we arrived at Gary's "rustic" cabin in Point Reyes, we put down our bags and walked through the building. We found an old computer and a floppy disk. I picked up the floppy disk and read it. The floppy disk said, "windows 98 startup disk." I then said with a grin, "Let's put some coal in this thing and fire it up!" Everyone laughed....

~Rico Barron

After dinner some of us watched a movie called Seven Brides for Seven Brothers... About half an hour in, I decided to see what the rest of the class was doing in the old room on the other side of the house. When I walked in, there was almost as much chaos as the van ride because of a glow-stick war. So I decided to join in. To win the game you needed to throw the glow-stick and hit the other team. About half way through, Reza got about twenty glow-sticks and just threw them right when everybody wasn't hiding, and he took out everyone. It was lots of fun....The definition of chaos is "complete disorder and confusion." Throughout the field trip there was a lot of chaos, but it was a good kind of chaos....

~ Evan Rose

Drake's Beach...had a beautiful view of Drake's Bay and some distant ridges that were shrouded in fog, and clouds. Gary ate his lunch, and Ciaran dug several deep holes while I looked for sea glass and shells down the beach. Sadly, I only found two pieces of sea glass, one white and one brown, but I found lots of whole shells. From where we were sitting we could see the sea lions that live in Drake's Bay, but not very well because they were out on a rock that jutted into the bay, so they were just tiny brownish-black blobs. We stayed in that spot a while, but then Gary realized that the tide was coming in and that we should go back before the way was blocked. On the way back, he realized that he couldn't take the other kids on the walk because of the tide. I was enthralled by Gary's explanations of how the beach, the Estero, and the bay were named for Sir Francis Drake. I relished the beautiful and serene walk with Gary, and the magnificent views we had from the beach at Drake's Estero....

~ Kelly Olivier

While we were hiking, we talked about the history of Sir Francis Drake. We learned that people have been looking at Sir Francis Drake's chaplain's travel journal to try to learn about where he landed to fix his damaged ship. In his journal he talks about seeing white cliffs in the sunlight. Drake's Estero's cliffs look white in the sunlight. He also described how perfect the low water level of the Estero is. Learning about the history of Sir Francis Drake was very fun! At the mouth of the Estero I could imagine a ship shaped like a pirate ship on it's side with people doing construction on the bottom. They would be pulling broken planks off the bottom of Sir Francis Drake's ship and putting on new boards and metal sheeting to fix the ship.

~ Ciaran Farley

The boys created an interesting and dangerous game where you would throw a rock at the crumbly cliff and try to get a large amount of rubble to fall off of it. After I watched this for about ten minutes, I decided to join in, and for some reason it was a very fun game. Someone would find a group of loose rocks on the cliff and shout, "target acquired" and show the others the "target." Then we would all throw rocks at the "target" until it came off the cliff. When that target was gone, we would then find another target and so on. After we had knocked down a particularly large "target," I discovered that it had crystals on it. Technically, they were just salt crystals that formed when salt water seeped into a crack in the cliff and dried up to form the crystals, but everybody was very excited. A little later on, the boys started to choose one specific rock, name it, and use it as a missile until it broke into little pieces. Rico named his Tooth Fairy, and later Jelly Bean, while Adam found one that looked kind of like a knife and named it Saber.

Shubha had the idea that we should stand on one of the clay rocks and watch the waves go in and out. At first, we went on this very low rock, but then we realized that we would get really wet, so we went on a medium sized one and stayed there for a while. Some of the boys were still building the fort, and Reza got a splinter. They needed my pocketknife because it has tweezers in it, so I left Shubha, Jeydie, and Mariah on the rock to go help Reza. While I was gone, a rogue wave came, and all the girls got their shoes wet. This happened because Shubha blocked the only way off the rock when the water is around the front of it. Mariah, Jeydie, and Shubha went back to their backpacks to try to find dry pants and socks, but they didn't have any extras packed. Shubha went off somewhere while Mariah, Jeydie, and I went to some rocks to poke sea anemones (it's actually quite fun). We decided to go to an even larger rock to find more anemones to poke. We found a whole colony, but they were all closed up because the tide pool that they were in would drain when it got full. We decided to try and fill it up with seaweed bulbs. Seaweed bulbs are the long, hollow parts of kelp with a larger bulb at the end. I cut open the two largest ones I could find with my pocketknife. We filled them with water over and over to try to fill up the tide pool, but it kept draining, and we gave up. We were pretty far away, so we decided that we should go back in case everyone was leaving.... I appreciated the freedom and sense of adventure that Helen and Gary gave us on this field trip. It was refreshing. I also enjoyed spending time with and getting to know the other kids in my class. I wish that I could see all the beaches in Point Reyes if Drake's Beach is anything to go by.

~Kelly Olivier

One of my favorite games was knife throwing, organized by Adam, Rico and Shubha. The rules were: don't throw the knife at anyone, don't throw a knife when anyone is in front, behind or next to the target, and don't jump in front or behind the target when someone is throwing. The objective was to get the knife stuck in the log about 10 feet away. The knife was black, and people weren't always very successful at hitting the log. That is how we lost the knife twice. The first time I found the knife, but the second time we weren't so lucky. Knife throwing was cool because you got to throw real weapons. My friends from Clifford School will be so jealous.

~ Sierra Sholes

The definition of chaos is "complete disorder and confusion." Throughout the field trip there was a lot of chaos, but it was a good kind of chaos. Sometimes there was peace, and there was always a lot of fun. I really look forward to the next middle school field trip, and I thought that this week was really amazing!

Essays on Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew

Editor's note: Having read The Taming of the Shrew in class, we saw the Cal Shakes production of it while on our field trip to Point Reyes.

CalShakes' Taming of The Shrew

By Shubha Chakravarty, age 13

CalShakes is a theater company in northern California that has a reputation for putting on spectacular plays. This year one of their plays was The Taming of The Shrew, directed by Shana Cooper. Having read this play in class, we went to see it. I can say with certainty that all of us were in for a surprise. This play is controversial and can be staged in many different ways. Miss Cooper had an interesting way of doing it. The production was funny and light, but, underlying the plot, was an interpretation, which sent a message about the characters and their relationships. It was sublime. She took this traditional comedy and tuned it to the demands of a modern audience.

Her character portrayal made the play unique. Bianca (Alexandra Henrikson) was the naughty, blonde beauty queen (recently proclaimed "Miss Padua"). Katherina, the Shrew, (Erica Sullivan) was the "spoilt teenager" wearing cargo pants and army boots, and Petruchio (Slate Holmgren) was the tough body builder wearing a bunch of outfits, including half a pair of pants and saran wrap. Baptista Minola (Rod Gnapp), the typical hardworking dad, wore a blazer, and Gremio (Danny Scheie), the crabby old man, had a bit of a '60s look and a New York accent. Instead of having Renaissance gentlemen come in with roses and medieval tunics to woo Bianca, Cooper made them wear blazers and shades, and carry heart shaped balloons. This all worked out. It would have been nice to see the traditional version of the play with the lords and ladies and dukes and duchesses, but body builders and spoilt teenagers worked just as well.

Other components also made a difference in conveying Cooper's vision. The music was interesting. It went from '60s music all the way to Lady Gaga's Poker Face. The theme song was "Will You Still Love Me Tomorrow?" which was an interesting choice for this play. The set was perfectly suited for this play, and conveyed the time setting immediately. There was a double floor. The bottom floor was bare, while the top was a living room in either Minola's house, or Petruchio's house. It was furnished with a modern reclining chair, plants, and a couch. This seemed to work out well, considering that the play was set in many locations, so it allowed for versatility.

By far, the best part about this play was how Miss Cooper depicted the changes the characters underwent. For example, when you read the play, you do not think of Bianca going through a change of personality, but in this production she definitely changed. In fact, Kate and Bianca almost switched roles. At the beginning of the play, Bianca says, "Sir, to your pleasure humbly I subscribe," when they ask her to leave. But at the end of the book, when the new husbands are betting on the obedience of their wives, she says, "Fie, what foolish duty call you this?" In the play she said this quite arrogantly, which was a bit surprising, especially because that is not how we expect Bianca to behave. But Bianca was not the only character who went through a change. Our main character, Kate, went through a huge change! You could see how Petruchio tamed her. At the beginning she was yelling and screaming and hitting everyone, including her sister. But at the end, as Kate and Petruchio were just walking off stage, you could see by the way they were holding hands and looking into each other's eyes that they were friends. That is what I thought made this a happily-ever-after play. After all of the drama and fights, it was a relief to see them together. I could see the change the characters went through clearly, which is something I enjoyed about the play.

The CalShakes performance of The Taming of The Shrew exceeded all of my expectations for it. The Taming of The Shrew can be a confusing play, but Miss Shana Cooper set a perfect balance of humor and seriousness. She did an exquisite job and impressed us all!

The Taming of the Shrew: A Play of Humor and Imagination By Kieran Rege, age 14

This fall, our class read William Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew: The Cambridge University Edition. It was deep, specific, and easy to understand. I was able to really enjoy myself while reading it as a part of our Reader's Theater production. Then I wondered how much the Cal Shakes version of the play was going to meet up with my expectations. I am happy to say that all out preparation absolutely paid off.

Individual performances by the actors were outstanding. All of the actors helped make these characters believable. There were serious characters, funny characters, mean characters, and some pretty complicated comical banter between them all. It all just seemed to work. The relationships were entertaining, and they made the play very enjoyable to watch. I loved it. Petruchio had a particularly interesting personality. He isn't your ordinary main character. For example, at his wedding, he wore a ridiculous costume. It was a part of his plan to tame his bride, Katherina. I'm just glad that it was part of the original play, instead of a superfluous new addition, which made no sense. Katherina was a suitably mean person. Her typical conversations with Petruchio included some hilarious moments, and the actress who portrayed her did a great job showing the evolution of her character, from mean to nice. Gremio, one of the suitors, and Grumio, Petruchio's servant, had so many laugh-out-loud moments. Gremio's accent, which was New York Jewish, was priceless, and Grumio acted as the fool of the play. They are good contenders for some of the funniest people I've seen in a theater production.

I also really appreciated the atmosphere of the play. It had so many themes and moods, including many funny scenes. But there were also serious scenes, such as the last scene when Katherina and Petruchio walked out of the room. The play had a consistent sense of morality and meaning, and every scene had a purpose, even the funny ones, such as a scene when Katherina was chasing after Hortensio. These types of moments were peppered into the play at just the right times. Shakespeare just seems to know the perfect moment to add comic relief. The pacing never wore thin either. Every scene transferred smoothly into the next. The little plot twists and unexpected change of character motivations made it even richer, especially the final speech in the play, which really brought out Katherina's true view of everything.

While the script of the play was similar to the one that our class read, the production was very ambitious and original. I thought that it was hilarious and very meaningful. I could really see a strong connection between Katherina and Petruchio by the end, which made this production special. I think that there is a moral in the play that suggests that good relationships depend on mutual respect. All of these elements together make this one of the most special plays out there.

Shakespeare: Modern vs. Traditional

By Mariah Stewart, age 13

In comparing the 16th century to the present in matters of equality, people's roles, and societal ideas, it becomes clear that some of the older ideas have been discarded in modern times. As a result, some directors direct Shakespeare's plays for a more modern audience through tone of voice, physical behavior, the overarching relationship of the characters throughout the play, the costumes, set, and music. A wonderful thing about Shakespeare is how many options he gives a director. In the Cal Shakes production, The Taming of the Shrew, the director decided to give the play a modern twist.

If you showed the Cal Shakes play to a 16th century audience, the reaction from the crowd would be quite different than the reaction from a modern audience. At the time, women were considered property and had no rights. In the 16th century, Katherina would have been portrayed as more broken than triumphant. She could even have been perceived as mad or crushed. In Shakespeare's time, Katherina was far from the perfect wife. In Shakespeare's time, Petruchio's powerful domination over Katherina would have been accepted. In the more modern production, however, even though Petruchio enjoyed depriving Katherina of food and sleep and manipulating her, he loosened his grip upon Katherina near the end of the play and even enjoyed Katherina's strength.

A modern audience has a very different outlook on the ending of the play than

By the end, Katherina has pulled herself together. In my perspective, she has started to look at the entire society in a different way. At first, she looks at the society with contempt, because it will not allow her to be who she wants to be, but later she looks at society as a system that is not exactly perfect, but works well enough to make England one the greatest countries in Europe for that time. Mirroring Katherina's change for the better is Bianca's for the worse. Bianca becomes more shrewish to get her way, while Katherina is tamer. Another change that I noticed was the switch in roles between Bianca and Katherina. In fact, the progress that I see in this play is the maturing of both Katherina and Petruchio.

Excerpts from a Final Examination in Early American History

Jamestown was important to U.S. history because...

Jamestown was the first colony, so it was partially an experiment, and after some adversity like The Starving Time, people began to figure out how to survive in America. They contributed ideas to the founding of America such as religious freedom, new crops, and democracy. They started bad things like slavery and owning a wife.

~ Kelly Olivier

Jamestown is important in U.S. history for three reasons. It was the first permanent settlement in America. Another reason why it was important was because Jamestown was the first settlement that made its own laws. Also, it allowed people from other countries and other religions to be free.

~ Luke Chacon

In 1619, many things happened that proved Jamestown was there to stay. Not only did they bring Africans, they brought women, too. This means that people are ready to stay and make families. Several other things happened such as the first labor strike, the first time English settlers were allowed to own land, and the first elected lawmakers known as the House of Burgesses, which gave the Virginians the 'chance to make laws instead of England making their laws.

~ Mariah Stewart

Just about everyone came to Jamestown in hope for freedom and a second chance. One of the greatest things about Jamestown in my eyes is its strength as a colony. It went through horrible times and continued onward. The settlers risked their lives to get a second chance. Their mental strength kept them breathing. It was will power, anger, and sadness that kept them fighting whatever was in their way. And that, in my eyes, is the beginning of the "new" age and the USA. Jamestown was also extremely unfortunate...many people lost their lives by arrow, starvation, sickness, or overworked labor coming to the land we call home today. We misunderstood our enemies, and they misunderstood us. We betrayed each other in the struggle for survival. As great a monument as Jamestown is, many people seem to ignore or neglect the bad things that have happened, however...it was and always will be history.

~ Rico Barron

Jamestown was a new beginning for many people. It gave people a second chance at life. At this time, in England, you would be distinguished as a peasant, king, queen, etc. In the New World, everyone was treated equally. This made people want to come to the New World even more. Who wants to be put down in one country, when you can be equal in another? People came here to start a new life.

Not everything about Jamestown led to good things in America's history. Jamestown did bring slavery to America and that was not really something to brag about. In 1619, slaves came. Why? The reason was that a new plant was found in Jamestown. Tobacco. This had started a big trade with England (which was also another fact of why Jamestown is important). But planting tobacco was not an easy job. The answer: get slaves to do it. Slaves were brought from Africa and sold to the people of Jamestown. This is one event that led to The Civil War.

~ Shubha Chakravarty

Jamestown was a colony that didn't give up and survived at the worst times. The colonists survived the Starving Time, Indian attacks, the weather, the environment, and The Massacre. The survivors almost gave up after all they had been through. But they came back, ending up with a colony and giving thanks. If there hadn't been a Jamestown, our present America wouldn't be so big and free."

~ Reza Navadeh

"Jamestown was a new beginning for many people. It gave people a second chance at life. While in England you would be distinguished as a peasant, king, queen, etc., in the New World, everyone was treated equally. This made people want to come to the New World even more. Who wants to be put down in one country, when you can be equal in another? People came here to start a new life.

What ideas (and ideals) did colonists bring? They wanted more freedom, isn't that why they came? But what was their standard of freedom? Everybody from Europe wanted as much or more freedom than in England. Now that might seem like a low standard, but at the time it was THE standard.

This is the most important point. Their standard was high for the time, and kept growing, until they broke away from England, until we have what we have today.

Research Papers on a Famous Person

Andrew Hamilton

By Shubha Chakravarty, age 13

Have you ever heard the term "Philadelphia Lawyer?" If yes, then do you know where it came from? It came from a very famous case called the Zenger Case, in which the great lawyer who fought and won the battle was from Virginia. This lawyer's name was Andrew Hamilton. This name might not ring a bell in your head, but Hamilton was the man who helped this country earn freedom of speech and freedom of press.

Born in 1676, in Scotland, this slightly chubby man did not speak much about his childhood, parentage, career, or even name. At one point he walked around with the name of Trent. In 1697, he arrived at Accomac County, Virginia and started learning law. He taught at a classical school, and there met a student of his named Joseph Preeson. He got a job on the Preeson plantation as a steward. In 1705, Preeson died, but Andrew still worked on the plantation. Soon after, on March 6th, 1706, Andrew married Ann Preeson, the widowed wife of Joseph Preeson.

In 1712, Andrew moved to Chestertown, Maryland and started to practice law. A little later he left for England to "raise his status." He was then called upon by the Penn family to fight a replevin case against Berkeley Codd. A replevin case is a case that allows for a person to get back whatever they lost if it is being kept away from them. Andrew helped him win the case and this was the start of a long and friendly journey between the Penn family and Hamilton. His victory with the Penn case and visit to England brought him popularity, and he caught the eye of the Baltimore family. This led to him becoming the deputy of the Maryland House of Delegates. On May 14th, 1715, he helped put together a series of laws called the Act of 1715, which helped form the law that was Maryland was based upon until the Revolutionary War. A little later there was some friction between the Native Americans and the Colonies. A Seneca man had been killed by a colonist on Native American Property. Andrew was sent to go and meet the five nations, or the Iroquois League. After peace was brought, Andrew went to them and gave them gifts on behalf of the Colonists.

By far, Hamilton is most well known for his excellence in the Zenger Case. John Peter Zenger was a printer for The New York Weekly Journal and had printed some papers that criticized the English. He was taken to trial for libel immediately. The trial was about to start when Andrew stood up and asked the judge if he could take the case. The judge could not say no to him because Andrew had become a very influential and wealthy person. So, Andrew took on the Zenger case pro-bono (which means he did it for free and did not take any payment.) His main plan was to surprise them and catch them off guard. First he admitted that it was indeed John who had written those papers. At this point the other team tried to end the case by saying that he admitted it, so he is guilty. But then Hamilton said something that changed American history forever. He said, "There is no libel if truth is told." The jury heard this and proclaimed Zenger as innocent.

Andrew had a nice family. He and his wife Ann had a few children; Margaret Hamilton born in 1709, James Hamilton in 1711, and Andrew Hamilton in 1713. Margaret married William Allen, and they had six children together. Andrew really bonded with his son-in-law, because they both worked in the government. Andrew Hamilton II married Mary Till, the step great granddaughter of Berkeley Codd, the man who Andrew faced in court with William Penn.

After looking at Andrew's work and success, I have come to the conclusion that he deserves the quality of "sense of justice." This was portrayed in his Zenger case, which was a huge accomplishment for America. If you do not believe me, then listen to what he said. He himself said, "It is not the cause of one poor printer, nor of New York alone...It may in its consequence effect every free man...in the main[land] of America. It is the best cause. It is the cause of liberty."

Deborah Sampson

By Sowmya Chandrasekaran, age 12

Deborah Sampson was a woman of true courage. She went into war disguised as a man not thinking of the consequences of being found out, all because of her need for adventure.

Deborah Sampson Gannet was born on December 17th 1760 in Plympton, Massachusetts, a small village, to Jonathon and Deborah Bradford Sampson, who was a descendant of William Bradford. She was the eldest of three boys and three girls. However, at a young age, her father left her family in order to go across the sea for adventure and drowned. Her mother could not support the large family and so sent them all to different friends, neighbors and families. Deborah became an indentured servant with Deacon Jeremiah and SuSannah Thomas. She would do all sorts of things; clean the house, sew and spin, and watch the children. She loved to learn, and so made the little boys in the families teach her the lessons that they learned in school. Finally, when she was 18, she earned her freedom and became a teacher, using all her knowledge from the little boys' lessons.

Deborah was someone who needed to have adventure and longed to travel around the world. So she enlisted in the army as a "continental soldier." and the local recruiting office recruited her as Robert Shurtlift from Caver. She bought herself some men's clothing. When she was dressed up in the men's clothing, her own mother couldn't recognize her! Deborah Sampson first served Captain George Webb. Her height of 5' 8" was average for men back then, so her fellow soldiers just thought that she was a short man. During her first battle, she got shocked with two musket balls on the thigh, and got a big gash on her forehead. The other soldiers in her troop decided to take her to a hospital, but she had asked them to leave her to die, for fear of being found out, but they refused. When she got to the hospital a couple of doctors took care of the cut on her forehead, but she left before they could take out the musket balls. Then later, with a penknife, she managed to take out one of the musket balls, but her leg never healed because of the other musket that was too deep in her leg to get.

About a year later, she was promoted to being a waiter to General John Patterson for about seven months. Then on June 24th, the President of Congress told General George Washington to lead a bunch of soldiers to Pennsylvania. But during the summer, Deborah got the fever and became unconscious. She was taken to a doctor, Dr. Binney, who found out the secret; however he did not reveal her secret. He took her home with him, where his wife and daughters took care of her. Then, after she recovered, she went back to war, but when the day for the soldiers to go home came, Dr. Binney gave her a note, asking her to give it to General Patterson. She knew that he would get upset, but he simply gave her an honorable discharge.

After she came back from war, she married a young farmer, Benjamin Gannet and had three children, Earl, Mary, and Patience. She also adopted Susanna Baker Sheperd, a delightful orphan.

Deborah Sampson was not very beautiful, but she was able to impersonate a man to get into the army. Paul Revere, one of her friends, said about her, "I have been induced to enquire her situation, and character, since she quit the male habit, and soldier's uniform for the most decent apparel of her own sex; and obliges me to say, that every person with whom I have conversed about her, and it is not a few, speak of her as a woman with handsome talents, good morals, a dutiful wife, and an affectionate parent." Deborah loved to speak. She would often wear her soldier uniform and make trips around England and New York giving speeches about serving her country. Her friend Paul Revere wrote to Congress asking for Deborah to be given a pension, which is like a payment, and so she was given four dollars every month.

Deborah Sampson died on April 29th 1827, at the age of 66 due to yellow fever. She is buried at Rock Ridge Cemetery in Sharon, Massachusetts. I believe that Deborah Sampson should receive the quality of Bravery, because she was the first woman to ever disguise herself as a man and go to war. After all it takes courage to be the first.
